Hiya Stuff!

Thanks for the quick reply. Kinda disappointed in not finding pages and pages of facts of life of a WAC. And by the way - those anonymous telephone calls are not the works of yours truly. Besides, you ought to be familiar with my "line" by now to know if it were me blowing from the other end. Whoever is making these "guess who" calls must keep the wires pretty busy, cause there's been complaints from other GI females on this post. I don't think the person or persons is using very good strategy - just a tin horn romeo... If I wanted to throw in a good punch anywhere, I'd like the other party to know who's dishing it out. Well, so much for that. Remind me some day and we'll go into a long huddle over it.

So you can dish it out eh? That's swell! Whenever you feel onery enough, come around and we'll slug it out blow by blow. OK? I'm telling you tho, you're up against some real opposition - veteran of many rugged campaigns. Ever hear of combat fatigue? Well, that's what I've got now and so it's been necessary to take thinks easy for the past few months. Only a matter of a little time before I get into fighting shape again. So I'm warning you - better be in condition.

How's the weather up there in the clouds? Your boss, Hambone, is always down here for a fireside chat, but I never have seen down this way. Don't work so hard - what's good enough for the boss is good enough for any one. And it's a good way to keep in condition to run up and down those stairs. Oh, you don't think so - well, just a suggestion.

Say, they tell me I'm rapidly becoming unpopular with a few of the GI's in and around the Personnel Office. Some of your protectorates no doubt. Professional jealousy I call it. You'll find that anywhere... especially among women. Right? Right!

Anyway, drop around about that time - if it's not too much out of the way. We handle almost anything from general information on ladies stockings to personal gripes. At your service - and tell your friends too.

Chief, M/C
