WRA Cautions Residents on Farm Equipment

Unscrupulous individuals have been attempting to make evacuees dispose of their farm equipment by means of high pressure telegrams, according to Victor L. Furth, acting chief of the WRA evacuee property office in San Francisco. For example, an evacuee at one of the centers received the following telegram:

"FEDERAL AGENCY HERE PICKING UP ALL UNUSED JAP. FARMING EQUIPMENT. BETTER MAKE LEASE OR SELL TO ME AS IT WILL BE PICKED UP NEXT WEEK. SEND BILL OF SALE GIVING SERIAL NUMBERS OF TRACTOR AND DISC. DELAY WILL MEAN LOSS. EQUIPMENT $20.00 MONTHLY RENTAL OR WILL BUY FOR CASH."

Expressing hope that no evacuee at Heart Mountain has complied with this sort of advice, Furth declared that so far as is known there is no federal agency gathering up unused farm equipment. While there is legislation pending in both houses of the California legislature designed to permit the state to exercise the right of eminent domain on unused farm equipment, as yet such bills have not passed.

In conducting an inventory of farm machinery and automotive equipment, the objects of the evacuee property office have been, first, to try to get all idle machinery into use; second, to facilitate the sale or lease of evacuee-owned equipment; and third, to obtain sufficient information to demonstrate whether or not there is any justification for drastic measure that would force this equipment out of present ownership.

The reports that have come in to date from the projects indicate that a very large percentage of evacuee-owned farm machinery is actually in use either on land owned by the evacuees or on land operated by the persons who have leased the farm machinery. A few evacuees have offered to sell their equipment but have also stated that they hope to relocate soon and use it in their own operations. Furth declared that "we are not urging evacuees to dispose of their property if they actually have a definite plan for relocation and are expecting to leave the project within a short time."

If, however, their relocation programs are not quite definitely worked out, it would be wise for the evacuees to consider leasing their equipment so that it would not be subject to requisition should the pending legislation become effective, he advised.

He added that evacuees who list equipment for sale should be asked to state definitely whether or not there are any agreements in force covering the use of their equipment.

"In some cases, we have found that implements offered for sale are actually under lease to some operator, and unless a satisfactory method is worked out for a purchaser to obtain possession of the equipment, no sale can be completed," Furth said.

Ceiling Placed on Used Commercial Cars

The OPA has placed a ceiling on the nation's stockpile of used commercial motor vehicles, according to word received here from Chester W. Hatch, evacuee property supervisor. The order went into effect April 26.

Hatch revealed that in making a sale on an "as is" basis, the seller must ascertain the base price for the vehicle, which will be the "value when new" at the factory, plus carload freight to the place where it is to be sold. The maximum price at which a person can sell his used vehicle will be the percentage worked out by the OPA in accordance with the age of the vehicle.

Residents may obtain further information from James H. Porter, evacuee property custodian, at his office in The Sentinel building.

Shorthand, Typing Instructors Wanted

Residents interested in teaching shorthand and typing in night school or high school are requested to see Harold R. Bottrell, director of adult education.

Because of one shorthand teacher leaving for outside and the other resigning because of family responsibilities, it is necessary to secure teachers in order to continue classes after this week. A shorthand-typing instructor is also wanted by the high school.

Bottrell hopes for a good response since there is increased demand outside for qualified secretaries and clerks.

Issuance of shoe purchase certificates will be discontinued until further notice, John A. Nelson, senior administrative officer, announced today.
