VIII. MANAGER'S NOTES

These days most of us are fairly comfortable with cooler weather and the gradual improvement of many things. Each morning we see the green growth of vegetables between the barracks.

Yet, mingled with the satisfaction comes the dissatisfaction because there is yet so much to be done.

We should be provided with better agricultural equipment and better living quarters.

We should also have large apartments for the larger families.

If we can satisfy the residents, we can also have better cooperation from them. If possible, I wish someone would take a good look into the difference between our camp and the camp in Arkansas!
