What To Do

What To Bo

This capricious April weather is still a confusing issue even after our being acclimated to southern Idaho. Back on the coast in those far away days when no one thought of going beyond the Rocky Mountains and points east in search of new homes, or of being placed in camps called "relocation centers," the weather situation was a routine matter. Seldom were the times a Webfooter or a Washingtonian was caught unprepared for any of the pranks Nature might play upon puny humanity.

When it belock like win or few pressure was a supplementation of the pranks of the play upon puny humanity.

When it looked like rain or fog we were prepared, because we never were fooled by Nature's whims' and fancies.

Wooden clogs were a familiar sight and should we also add sound along the pavements of the Rose City and seldom were the times a feminine passerby had to empty out the coastal rains from her boat-like footgear.

ecastal rains from her boat-like footgear.

Entering our second year in Hunt, we should be prepared for anything—blazing summer days, snow clogged wintry days, "marshmallow days" that inevitably follow the spring haw or a heavy rain, the frequent wind and dust storms, the copious amount of rainfall that seems to pour out from the open skies—but whenever Nature finally decides what the day is to be like, we are constanly surprised.

After waiting for the balmy spring days we used to know on the west coast, the sun finally peeps out from behind the fleecy clouds like a coquette and deceptively flirts with Minidokans, who poor souls have faith in the weather, and everyone happily shouts that "Spring is here." Gay prints blossom out, T-shirts come out of hiding as heavy sweaters are peeled off, and Arctics, umbrellas, boots are ungraciously shoved into the far corners of the closet. Foolish Huntites!

graciously shoved into the far corners of the closet. Foolish Huntites!

Snow, to most of us, was a white blanket, we used to admire from a safe distance as it adorned the familiar peaks of the coastal regions. Snow, we think is a thing of beauty, but anow is also synonymous with winter. Snow and April just do not go together.

April means spring planting, the promise of rich harvests in the fall, the bursting buds, the chirping of birds just returned from warmer climes. Snow in April is like eating moch in July—stripped of its glamor and the exciting tang that it exhudes in its proper time and setting.

Yes, we have much to learn in our habitat—new—two years ago—now becoming more familiar as the days go by—but we shall still continue to be surprised whenever the weather changes, and we shall be undecided as to our apparel, we shall never know when winter has left us for good and we must broil in the mid-summer heat.—kt.
