Don't Let Jack Frost Bite You

Watch out for frostbite and its after-effects.

That's the warning given by the Hospital in instructing treatment for frostbite victims.

Danger is indicated when the skin becomes abnormally red and fails to blanch when pressed. In the advanced stage, the skin becomes mottled with red and purple spots.

When the skin is grayish white and waxy or blistered, the following emergency treatment should be given:

Do not rub, but cover the frostbitten part with a warm hand. Never bring the victim near a stove or an open fire, but get him to a cool room which can be warmed gradually. Clean the frozen part and paint with antiseptic. Keep the frostbitten part immobile in serious cases until proper treatment can be administered.

Children should be adequately clothed in woolen socks, gloves, woolen clothing and ear covering. As an added precaution, greasing the child's nose, ears and chin with vaseline helps. When the temperature falls below 14°, anemic or frail children should be kept indoors. Even a robust child should not be exposed too long.

LAST MINUTE

BULLETIN

Voluntary wood workers will turn in their tools at the close of regular hours tomorrow. Monday morning, they will be expected back on their former jobs.

This decision was reached yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the Joint Wood committee which represents the Community Council, the block managers and the administration.

The committee, in announcing its decision, reported that the fuel situation was not completely solved. They felt, however, that it was no longer a critical problem and that normal operations would suffice in the future. A lack of equipment suitable for hauling poles out of the woods, while the ground is as wet as it has been during the past week, made the work of the large voluntary crews inefficient.

The committee agreed upon one exception in calling off the wood "emergency." Voluntary wood cutters who live in Block 17 will continue in that capacity, and not report back to their regular jobs. That block's supply of fuel was not sufficient to allow let up on the gathering operations.

If in the future, the committee ruled, individual blocks find their fuel supply dangerously low, it may be possible to arrange block-wide "emergencies." Such a situation, it announced, should be brought to the attention of the block manager. He may present his block's desires to the committee, which will vote yes or no to the proposal.
