EAST INDIES HOSTILE TO CONQUEROR

Melbourne: A Dutch civilian official who has reached Australia after living for four months under Japanese military rule in one of the islands of the Netherlands East Indies reports that the natives have grown increasingly hostile to the Japanese occupying forces. He gave as reasons for the hostility: depriving many of the natives of their positions (the Japanese army has announced the sending of many thousand officials and tradesmen into the occupied areas), forcing merchants to dispose of their goods in exchange for Japanese emergency money, and mistreatment of women.

Japanese forces on the island, he reported further, are in constant danger of attack and cannot move around at night in groups of less than four. They do not attempt to go inland, except in armored trucks.
