On The Other Hand

By Roy M. Takeno

In Portland, Oregon, vandals desecrated a Japanese cemetery. In Washington, D. C., a well-known artist tried to present a letter opener, allegedly carved from the bone of a Japanese soldier...

Church people in Oregon had tried to clean the cemetery in the absence of the Japanese, but were prevented from doing so by a group of American Legionnaires...

And so it goes. Incidents after incidents. A bitter commentary upon the apparent indifference of savagery in a time of war...

It is most important that we be careful to recognize the impulses of the Japanese themselves, in such matters as to whether they shall keep their emperor. I believe it would be better to let them keep him; it took a long time for the military men to persuade him to join up with the Axis. He is liberal in sentiment. "I think that when the emperor gives the word for the war to stop, it's going to stop."

Crisis Foreseen By Educator Here

The nation is in for some serious crises in racial relations during and after the war, but in the long run the American people will choose the democratic instead of the undemocratic way, Dr. Alain Locke, Negro educator and author, said yesterday in Denver.

government's firm stand has worked," he said. "If you try to keep such issues out of sight and ignore them, they will break out later in more serious forms."

INQUEST SET

An inquest into the death of Miss Ito Kawamoto, 29, will be held at 10 a. m. today. Deputy Coroner Gus Economy announced. Miss Kawamoto was found dead early yesterday in a bed at the home of friends, 1159 21st St.

Ray Humphreys, chief investigator for District Attorney James T. Burke, said Miss Kawamoto died of complications apparently following an illegal operation. A native of Eaton, Colo., and a former student of the Colorado State College of Education in Greeley, Miss Kawamoto had lived in Denver several years. Her parents died when she was a young woman. She had been working as a maid at the time of her death.

Say Democrats on Spot On Race Parity Plank

Washington—The Democratic party has put itself on the spot on the racial question by adopting a plank which underscores every hot issue in this field, says Selden Bennett.
