The magic of the dye-bath can give your faded wearables of last summer another season's use, as well as new color beauty, and it doesn't matter if they're made of synthetic fibers, such as rayon, or of natural fibers like cotton and linen, according to the Tintex Home Economics Bureau. An all-fabric dye, in a choice of 50 colors, is now available for the purpose.

However, if your slacks, blouses, shorts and other outdoor wearables have become unevenly faded, as is often the case, or if you want to change to an entirely different color, the bureau recommends the use of color remover first. Neither the all-fabric dye nor the color remover, made by the same manufacturer, require boiling. Each is only a dime a package. You can have gloves to match every ensemble in your wardrobe by the same tintexing process. If they're white or light-colored, you need but dye, the bureau points out. If they're dark, and you're changing to a new color, use color remover first.
