THIS ROTTEN BUSINESS OF PUTTING OUT A PAPER

No business calls for more pressure on the mind than newspaper publishing before it goes to press, especially when the situation is forced on a small-time cutfit like ours.

To beat the deadline, a newsman resorts to all the tricks he knows to turn out copy to fill a gaping hole on page one.

We should like to write about a phase of the business because it's such a rotten trade.

If you have a son who yearns to become a newspaper publisher just because his teacher said he wrote a fine essay, discourage him. Don't let it go to his head. Anyone can write! If he has any head at all, he surely won't contemplate on becoming a publisher.

The life of a publisher is a string of complaints fired at him from every direction. And the damn fool (pardon us, the publisher, that is) has to take it in stride.

The complaints run in cycles, it seems, and the loudest howls pour in from people who don't even subscribe to the paper.

There's the elite crowd which raises the roof because there isn't enough social items. And there's the younger group which thinks that we lack sports news.

In this bracket,, there's the bowling crowd which believes we should dramatize every frame of their game. In fact, we heard through reliable sources that someone suggested a petition asking for more space. (We urge him and his friends to gloat over the scores by informing the "Northwest Bowler" about their achievements. The "Northwest Bowler", after all, is a paper devoted entirely to the tenpin game.)

The basketball and baseball clans are fairly decent towards us. They are less violent in their squawks and less apt to go into a tantrum because their names weren't in the paper through an oversight.

The intellectuals clamfor for more editorials, feature stories and columns. Theirs is a legitimate and sound protest, and their requests will be answered in due time.

And still another group wants to know why we don't print hush-hush scandals within our community. Divorces and such are not our meat, although we know of more than a score of which we could splash on the paper.. One of the men asked us not to print his case, and although we complied he was an extremely unappreciative fellow. A nationally-known publisher does a spicy job of it, so we don't intend to compete with him.

But it all boils down to this: If we were blessed with wealth and manpower, we could depict the Nisei scene much better.

Work on a polio vaccine is no In accepting the gift from Adrian new. Certain preparations were shown to protect monkeys mor Japan, Speaker Shidehara conveyed than 25 years ago. These, however, proved unsatisfactory for use on humans. More potent materials have been developed during the past ten years, but these are still not suitable for human immunization.

A big problem in this work is to find a good source of large amounts of the infectious agent to be processed into vaccine. The polio germ, being a virus, will grow only in living cells.

Like most viruses, that which causes polio will grow in some kinds of tissues and not in others. Whether it will grow well enough in any of the available tissues to make this useful in vaccine production is one of the problems now being studied intensively.

When a satisfactory source of virus is found and methods of processing it into a vaccine are adequately refined, it will be necessary to use at least three different kinds of polio virus in the vaccine. That many separate kinds of virus have been shown to exist. Resistance to one does not confer resistance to

Although the polio virus is too small to be seen under a microscope, knowledge of its properties and habits has been steadily increasing during recent years. While this is a difficult field, it is reasonable to expect that effective methods of preventing the disease will ultimately result from the continued progress of research.
