

Since so many Japanese families liked to garden the camp set aside an area just outside the camp where people could put in a garden. The guards would watch as the workers transformed the space into a lush garden which provided quite a bit of food, as well as a useful activity. Hisa says the camps contributed to the success of mail-order companies such as Sears-Roebuck, Montgomery Wards and Spiegel since people needed supplies and they couldn't leave camp so they would order from such companies. Once people saw how convenient that was they continued the practice.

This is a program from the first Commencement of High School Graduates at the Camp.
