Dear Kan,

It was certainly a pleasant surprise to hear from you way up in New York. But we are more than glad that you have found work, and that you are now busy at it. I don't really know too much about draftsman's work or about mechanical drawing, but I am sure that you are liking the work, I hope you do.

I hope, too, that you were able to find a place in the suburbs by this time, and have called for your family. But places are hard to find these days, aren't they? I hope you were successful.

As for us, Harry is busy with his studies for the final Oral Exams that he will be taking very shortly now, maybe this next week- but anyway the following week sure. As for me, I quit the work there, and at the present time I am not working. I am staying home and doing the typing of his Thesis for him. As you can see for yourself, I am just no good as a typist for I never had formal lessons on it, i.e., school training or anything like that. I just pick them out.

By the way, excuse me for typing this letter but, if you just knew what my long-hand was like, you would take this typing any day. And so you better just let me type like this.

You say you went up as far as Boston? You should have told me before, and then you could have met my dentist brother up there. Of course he couldn't have helped you with finding the type of job that you wanted, but it would have been nice to have met him anyway, don't you think? Well, maybe there will be another time.

Well, everything over here, including the weather is very fine these days. I hope that it is the same up in New York.

Until again then, I remain,

Sincerely,

Sayuri Swamoto
