

Wed. Nite.

Hello Kan:

Another day is o'er. It won't be long now. No - not many more days before the bunny comes. Oh yes, maybe chicks too. He cleaned up the two houses today. Gosh, Pa told and still tells the buyers that ours is the best in the market - see! large flowers. I'm proud to tell you. When John & I heard him say that a week ago, we just laughed; but now how we cuss at the darn big flowers. - Especially those insignificant buds that are so stubborn & unyielding and insist upon tearing the paper. We're using the half-sheets instead the quarters but even then, the dollar and up grades are too gigantic. Beautiful but - (maybe dumb.) Did you know that we sort of sub-contracted to sell over 9thousand to Mac's stores? They certainly getting good stocks. Also, Woolworth's is again catering. A load over 500 went down to Santa Barbara last night. Oh, it think we'll sell more than I expected Good thing, Easter only comes once a year, all I see and do, is ^{the} lillies everywhere. So don't be amazed if this is also so influenced.

It's the environment + inheritance

Oh Stanley made me laugh the other day when Pa said, as he usually does, "You come this way, with wheelbarrow." Stanley was the doomed one, this time, as he picked up the vehicle, he sang "where're you go, I'll follow you."

Well, I don't know of any other news.
It looks as though Hatch is writing you an amusing letter or if you rather prefer, an interesting account of the days. She'll give you the inside dope.
See, some people get me all rattled up, old Sunbonnet Sue has been out with us for the last two days; and oh gosh, she gets me on my nerves. I'd rather have Spartan follow me all day than her. We got a good site yesterday when her undershirt fell in the greenhouse and she - the poor ignominious, asked Jok what she should do. Laugh.

Spartan is still at random. People don't bother about him anymore. Texas tried twice by scaling up the different parts of his yard, but it was useless.
Spartan has learnt how to climb the fences. I think Texas was afraid of the dog at first, because he would ^{pat} the boards quick. This letter looks as though I meant to trace the history of writing material; but I'm not. After running Tob's and Tom's pen dry, I quit. Luckily, I work cross word puzzles yet; other wise, I wouldn't have this convenient pencil with me. It's small, but it's expressive.

I suppose you're coming home this week-end too. As far as I am able to see, there shouldn't be any reason for you to rush home. Most of my rushing ^{will} be over — at least I hope so. Too bad, you had trouble last week.

Too sleepy to try to think so adieu. The last night say, "All well so sleep well!"
with.
