

NIHONMACHI IN EARLY 1900's

South Avenue and Main Street area. In 1902, the earliest photograph of Nihonmachi (Japan town) is The San Francisco Japanese Consular Office. Located on the southeast corner of South Avenue and Main Street, it was the only building of its kind in the neighborhood. The area was thick with Japanese shops of all kinds. The main concentration of Japanese stores, from west to east, was found in an area extending southeast on Main, Washington, and Street about 5th Avenue. The churches and the large schools were to be seen in the area, from the center to their shops in both ways and other corners.

from within meeting and leaving slowly and chatting in Japanese, and their feet engaged in a springy game of "push" on uneven Washington Street were special scenes of Nihonmachi.
