THE IMMORTAL HOPE

"Beloved, now we are the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

Life is quite likely to become dismal and uninteresting to all of us as we grow older, unless there reaches away into the unknown future the vision of an everlasting hope. This hope is instinctive with most of us. It fits in with the buoyancy and expectancy of human nature. It is the logical outcome of a mood of anticipation which is strongly with us in childhood and should never be outgrown. Every stream in the current of our being sets toward an immortal sea as the waters of the river flow unerringly toward the ocean. True, we have no chart of that sea to offer and no description of it to give. It is like "something lost beyond the ranges; something lost and waiting for us," and like Kipling's explorer we must go and find it. But we do not go alone; even now He leads the way into a new and better world wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Project.... Make this Easter Day a new beginning of life and service. Forgetting all that is behind, reach forward to that which is before.
