ED BARRY ('EDBA') OF 'VARIETY' DIES AT 60

Edward J. Barry (Edba), veteran VARIETY editorial staffer, died of a coronary thrombosis at St. Clare's Hospital, N. Y., Thursday (26) after being rushed there and placed in an oxygen tent following an attack at home the same day. Services were held Monday (30) at the Barrett Funeral Chapel, N. Y. He would have been 61 in July.

Barry had been with VARIETY more than 25 years. In the heyday of burlesque and in the Prohibition era, when Greenwich Village was a colorful news beat, he specialized in stories in those fields, along with the Times Square court beat. More recently he had covered vaudeville, but he had been dominantly on the copydesk. He had been a newspaperman more than 40 years, first joining VARIETY when Sime Silverman, founder of this paper, took over the Clipper in the early '20s. Barry had been a Clipper staffer at the time, previously having worked for many years in the drama department of the old N. Y. American.

Survived by his widow.
