

Million Whedon, N. Y.

A lawyer to be successful must be cautious, diplomatic, shrewd, an expert gollier, of equable temper slow to anger, and favored with a retentive memory, good cigars, excellent business judgment, the embodiment of virtue but with a good working knowledge of evil. He must understand bookkeeping, banking, medicine, human nature and some law. To these qualifications he must add that of a mind reader, a hypnotist and a good story-teller, then, too, he must be familiar with machinery of all kinds and know the price of everything from a second-hand Jew's harp to the salvage value of the skyscraper and the union rate for wiping joints or performing an autopsy. He should be a good horse trader, understand railroad timetables and be able to reason with a woman
