

Kenneth Dyke

These two buildings are the latrines. There were so many people in ratio to the facilities that we often were obliged to try and reach another area's latrine "in time". The one to the left is the women's and that to the right is the men's. The women, being women put up a cloth covering over the screen door, and later built large wooden semi-walls to obscure the doorway. The men, being men, did nothing. Life became rather an impersonal thing.