This is my ^(Under the 6 windows) wonderful history class. The entire school was housed under one roof with no partitions between classes. There would be so much noise that one by one, the master permitting, the teachers would leave their classes out on the grandstand where there would be less noise. The small partitions which appear as a blackboards are merely plywood covering which hid the openings which were formerly used as bars. I can imagine all the money that passed from pocket to pocket in my history class. So it makes it hard for one to concentrate on what Aristotle did thousands of years ago.
