

□ Remember the first enamelware you saw? Probably grandmother's marbled coffee pot. Enamelware seems as American as the Paul Revere Bowl. Yet, like so much we covet in tradition, it was inherited from European artist/craftsmen. □ The enameling process has changed only slightly from the original 18th Century concept of a glass-like, porcelain coating on metal; protection against heat and corrosion. True, machines have taken over. But TAKAHASHI

 TOKO Takahashi'

ENAMELWARE is still hand-dipped and fired. □ What has changed is the aesthetics of enamelware. Tradition has become contemporary. The lasting beauty and restraint of original designs has been preserved, but the somber, stony greys and marbled whites of grandmother's graniteware have turned to COLOR. And what COLOR! □ This is where we shine—or dazzle. TAKAHASHI COLORS are individually mixed for their unique brilliance; matched for decorative coordination. If you're not familiar with TAKAHASHI COLOR, we hope you soon will be.
