OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL
Camp Grant, Illinois

April 23, 1942

To the officers and soldiers of Camp Grant:-

May I take this means of extending to each one of you my cordial greetings and also to express to you my admiration of the fine spirit you have shown and the interest you have taken in your work.

We are engaged in a tremendous task, and it is only by an enthusiastic interest and determination to win that we will accomplish it. While at Camp Grant you have been preparing yourselves for the work that is to come, and you have already manifested that necessary spirit of determination. I feel confident that you have prepared yourselves for that final effort which will restore peace to the world and insure the continuation of our American liberty.

Wherever your duties may take you, you have my best wishes for continued success.

HISTORY OF CAMP GRANT DURING FIRST WORLD WAR

Camp Grant came into being in the early months of World War I, when prominent business men of nearby Rockford requested the War Department to consider the site as a cantonment for the rapidly growing Army.

The land was inspected on June 2, 1917, and shortly afterwards Secretary of War Newton Baker announced that it was acceptable. Thus the Camp, bounded on the north by the city of Rockford, farm lands on the east, and the Kishwaukee and Rock rivers on the south and west respectively, was started.

Thousands of workers appeared to transform these green fields of northern Illinois into a huge training base. Lumber and building materials piled into town on every freight and baggage car, and a construction camp soon was erected. The first actual work on the Post was begun by a Chicago contracting company on June 30. Major Donald H. Sawyer, Construction Quartermaster, supervised the work.

Two months later 1,100 buildings were completed. The entire Camp contained: 48,000,000 feet of lumber; 300 miles of electric wiring; 30 miles of water pipe; 1,000 tons of nails; 150 acres of roofing, and 170 carloads of plumbing equipment. There were also drilled eight fresh water wells, and a 250,000-gallon water tank was erected. This was supplemented with a 300,000-gallon water reservoir.

The Camp, just two months previously a grain field, now took the form of a small city. The barracks of two-story design, each housed 250 men. There were also officers quarters, mess halls, a 1,300-bed station hospital, and stables for many horses. Recreation buildings followed in close order and were built by the Young Men's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, B'nai-B'rith, the Salvation Army, the Red Cross, the American Library Association and others. The Liberty Theatre with a seating capacity for 4,500 people was put up by the War Department. The finishing touches included a mile long parade ground and a large rifle range.

The first soldiers to arrive were Company A, First Illinois Engineers, on July 2, and they were followed by the First Illinois Infantry Regiment. The Camp was designated Camp Grant, in honor of General U. S. Grant, on July 15. By fall there were over 500 cooks and bakers feeding over 18,000 men on the Post. The Camp reached its peak in 1918 when it housed 50,000 officers and enlisted men.

Following the War it fell into disuse after serving as a demobilization center for mid-western troops, and a training school for chaplains. In 1924 the Illinois National Guard began using it for summer camps and later it also served as home for six Civilian Conservation Corps companies.

THE PRESENT (WORLD WAR No. II) CAMP GRANT

Camp Grant became the first Medical Replacement Training Center west of the Alleghanies when the Selective Service System came into effect, and it saw nearly eleven months of service in 1941. Old Camp Grant had almost returned to its pastoral state when the present emergency brought it back to life. It grew from a handful of buildings on muddy streets to its present size and beauty in record time.

Actual work on the Camp began in November, 1940. Among the first officers on the Post were Colonel J. H. Davidson, Colonel C. J. Otjen, Colonel Joseph I. Martin, Lieutenant Colonel Archibald MacKechnie, Lieutenant Colonel J. F. Bohlender, Captain L. T. Smith and Captain W. E. Donaldson. Colonel Davidson commanded the Camp. The first Selective Service men arrived on February 16, and they were followed closely by 14 nurses under Miss Elizabeth Fitch, now chief nurse in the station hospital.

Early 1941 witnessed the formation of the 26th Battalion, the first Medical Training Unit to be organized. Within two months the Replacement Center's strength of seven permanent battalions was reached. By April the Service Club and main Theatre in the Replacement Center, to supplement those in the Reception Center, were completed.

The Camp marked a new phase in its history on May 23, when Brigadier General John M. Willis became Commanding Officer. In succeeding Colonel Davidson, General Willis became the first General to command Camp Grant since the World War I. Previously he had been stationed at Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania, where he served as Commandant of the Medical Field Service School. Greeting their new Commander 6,700 men of the Replacement Center passed in review before him on the drill field and were highly complimented by General Willis.

On Memorial Day Camp Grant soldiers paraded in Rockford. The parade comprised 1,500 troops, including trainees of the 30th Battalion, the Medical Replacement Center Band and 70 motorized units.

One of the highlights in the Camp's history was the visit of Major General James C. Magee, Surgeon General of the United States Army, and the same time Lieutenant Colonel Clyde S. Wilson assumed acting command of the Station Hospital. Shortly after Major Robert E. McMillan, then a Captain and formerly a Chicago Municipal Court Judge, became Judge Advocate.

While work is the keynote of the Medical Replacement Training Center, time has been found for sports. Successful teams have been produced on the Post and include such stars as Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, descendant of the poet, who played for Northwestern University, Red Meyer, of Beloit College, and many others. Outstanding visiting athletes have been Dizzy Dean, Joe Louis, and Maxie Rosenbloom.

The Camp reached nation-wide prominence among civilians throughout the country late in the summer when the soldiers selected Louise Gaines, auburn-haired Lexington, Kentucky, miss, as their Camp Sweetheart.

Arriving at the reservation with a battery of newsmen and photographers in her wake, she captured the hearts of 10,000 men with a single smile. Her picture and her Cinderella-like story were carried in every major newspaper of the United States.

Favored by a mild winter, the reception and training program continued through the end of its first year and with the advent of spring came the announcement that the Medical Replacement Center would be increased in size. The new units were to be housed in tents on the southwestern and southeastern sections of the reservation.

And so the parade of men through Camp Grant continued and the post grew and prospered with each succeeding day as its men, through the skills taught them here, spread far and wide the fame of this Northern Illinois Army camp.

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL
CAMP GRANT, ILLINOIS

April 23, 1942

Cordial greetings to each officer and enlisted man of the Medical Replacement Training Center!

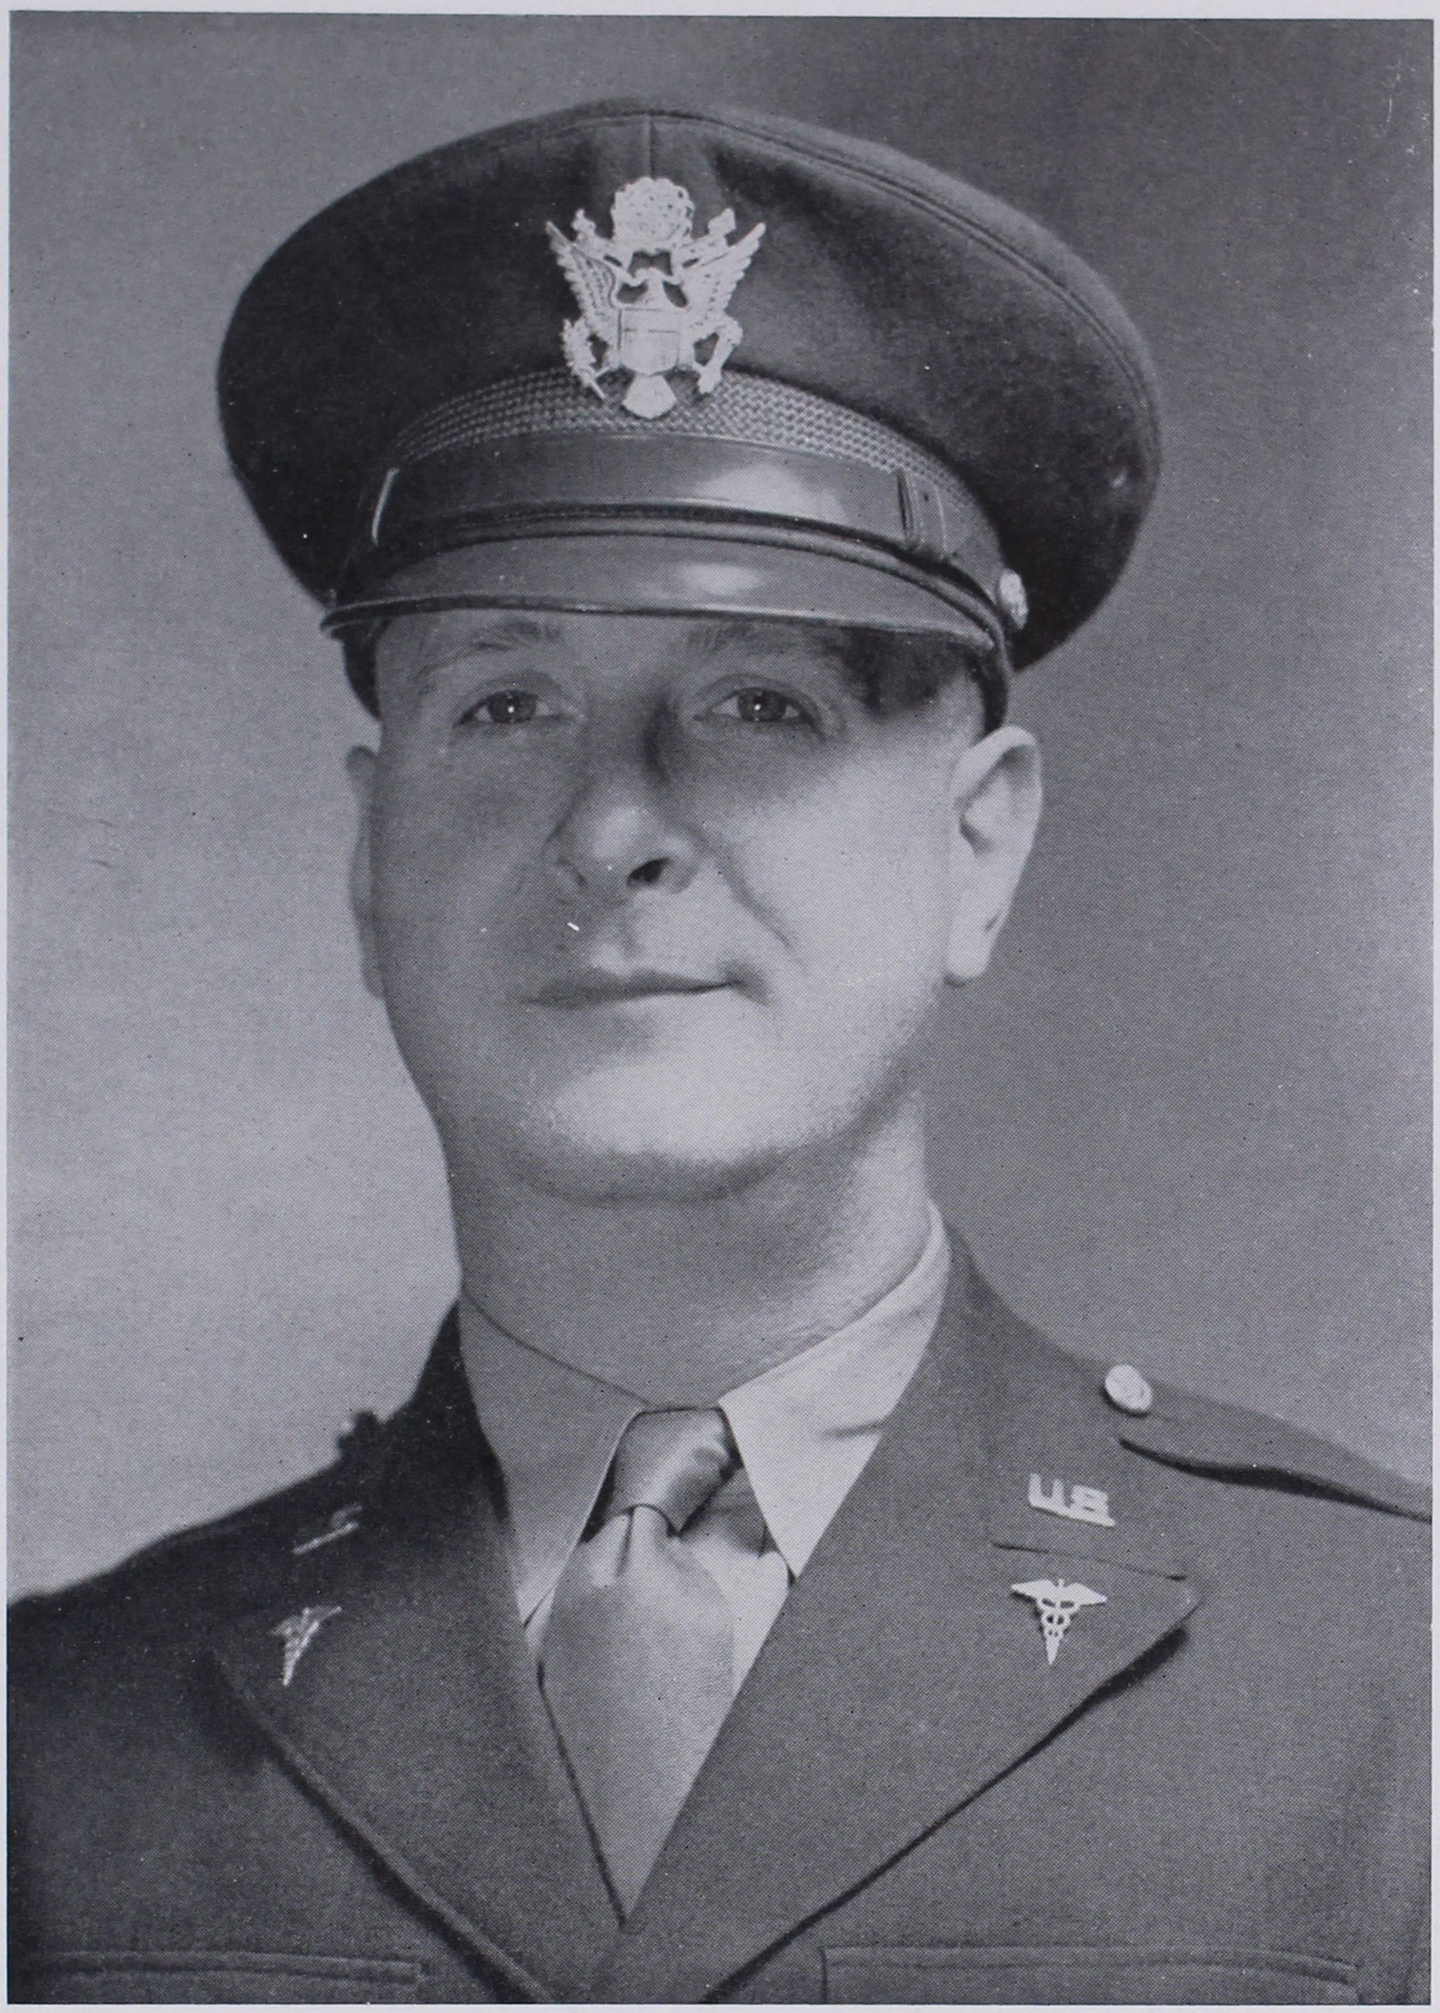

It has been my good fortune to have continued as Executive Officer of this Center since its establishment in 1940. Thus I have had ample opportunity to appreciate the fine character of service you have rendered.

The outstanding record you have made in training the thousands of young Americans who have passed through the Center is an enviable one. This record has been possible only through your continued efforts. Your enthusiasm for your work and loyalty to your country has been an outstanding feature of the Center's history.

For your efforts I wish to express my sincere appreciation in full realization that the success we have attained has been solely because you have continued to strive for the ideal in training the individuals of the Medical Department.

Medical Replacement Training Center

The Medical Replacement Training Center at Camp Grant, Illinois, is engaged in the production of medical soldiers capable of assuming duty with the field armies of the United States.

At the end of his training period at Camp Grant the medical soldier is well grounded in medico-military basic training and is capable of continuing with advanced training in the unit to which he is permanently assigned.

One of the most important parts of training at Camp Grant is physical development. It is here that green men are hardened to withstand the rigors of combat service. Such hardening is accomplished by drill, road marches, calesthenics, and an organized athletic program. The mass athletic program calls for one afternoon a week to be devoted to softball, volley ball, tug of war, touch football, push ball, and other sports. Every man who is not on special detail takes part in these events.

Apart from this program basketball and boxing are the most popular sports, and inter-battalion tournaments are held in these activities.

Camp Grant, in the north central section of Illinois, has a temperature from 105 degrees in summer to —20 degrees in winter. This widely varied scale has proven profitable in training the men for service in many climes.

The training courses in the Medical Replacement Training Center include: Military courtesy and discipline; personal hygiene and first aid; care of clothing and equipment; individual defense against chemical attack; individual defense against air and mechanized attack; interior guard and drill; marches and bivouacs, and physical training and mass athletics.

Technical subjects: Hasty entrenchments and shelter; entrucking and detrucking; anatomy and physiology; nomenclature and care of organizational equipment; field medical records, treatment of gas casualties; litter drill and ambulance loading; field sanitation; materia medica and pharmacy; medical and surgical nursing; heavy tent pitching; organization and function of arms; organization and function of medical units, and medical aid (splints, bandaging, and dressings).

Tactical and logistical: Scouting and patrolling; orientation in night combat; communications in combat; technical and tactical employment of medical field units; troop movements by motor, and inspections.

MRTC, in addition to routine basic training trains men in certain specialties. These include: Bakers and cooks, mess sergeants, clerks, chauffeurs, motorcyclists, auto mechanics and buglers. Students for attendance at these schools are selected by the Classification Section of the Replacement Center on the basis of civilian occupation and suitability for particular specialty. Men for these schools are selected after a minimum of two weeks of basic training has been served.

Several other activities which cannot be classed purely as training are carried on at the Center. Inocculations against typhoid, tetanus, and yellow fever are given each man. Each soldier has his blood typed and a record of his type of blood placed on his identification tag. He is completely outfitted with clothing and individual equipment in accordance with the War Department Table of Basic Allowances. Each man entering the Center is classified early in the training period and later on in the course on the basis of his development and demonstrated aptitude. This insures placing him where he will be of the most value to the service.

GREETINGS

April 22, 1942.

To the Officers and Men of the Camp Grant Reception Center:

The mission assigned this command is an important one. It is, to correctly classify and assign our new soldiers so that their natural abilities and civilian training will be of greatest use to the Army.

To date, over 100,000 men have been processed and sent from here. They were handled well and efficiently. Long hours and unremitting effort on the part of all was necessary. It was cheerfully given.

Our present national emergency requires an all-out performance of duties. I am confident that all members of this command will respond to the very limit of their capabilities.

In the performance of all duties our motto will be, "Equalled by few, excelled by none."
