— Synopsis —

Sir Joseph Porter has come to visit officially H. M. S. Pinafore, accompanied by his female relatives. While on board, he asks the hand of the captain's daughter whose heart has already been given to Ralph, a member of the crew, but whose hand she cannot give him due to the great difference between them in social rank. The sailors plot an elopement for Josephine and Ralph, but are betrayed by Dick Deadeye, who tells the plans to the captain. Just as Ralph is to be sent to a dungeon cell for his audacity, Little Buttercup discloses the fact that years before, she had cared for two children, one of them the low-born child, the captain. After this revelation of high rank, the other of low rank, and that she had mixed the children up. The high-born child was Ralph, Ralph, now exalted to the command of H. M. S. Pinafore, claims Josephine. The captain, lowered from his former rank, asks the hand of Buttercup, and the Admiral graciously condescends to marry his cousin Hebe.
