Collection Information

The Densho Legacy Archive is a physical collection housed on-site at the Densho offices in Seattle. The collection is comprised of institutional records that cover the period from Densho's conceptualization as the Densho Legacy Project to the present day as a digital repository. 150 photographs from this collection have been published on Densho's digital repository, but there are many more records in the collection that have not been published digitally. These records include paper material which make up the bulk of this collection and several other record types such as the remaining ~2000 photographs and objects such as cds, floppy disks, posters, and oversized design documents. The Densho Legacy Archive is a great resource for learning more about the institutional history of Densho, the work that Densho does, and the people that have worked for the organization.

Administrative Information

The Densho Legacy Archive was accessioned primarily from materials around Tom Ikeda's desk and other spaces around the Densho office. The collection was processed from June to December 2023 with funding from a 4Culture grant. The collection is open and viewable by the public and within the creative commons. To view the collection, please contact collections@densho.org to schedule an appointment and for inquiries.

Scope and Content

The Densho Legacy Archive contains organizational records that tell the story of both Densho the organization and the people that have worked with and for Densho. For example, the archive contains numerous promotional pamphlets from Densho's history, records from events hosted and attended by Densho, and records related to different parts of Densho's mission such as educational material and oral history interview training and preparation documents. The collection also contains conceptual and founding documents for Densho, large amounts of organizational correspondence, and other records such as meeting minutes and planning documents. Since many of the processed records were from Tom Ikeda's desk space, there are a great deal of notes written by Tom on various subjects, and many of the records are related to Tom's job as Densho's executive director or are from Tom's perspective.

The Densho Legacy Archive consists of 12 carton sized boxes and one oversized records box, and the collection contains about 12 cubic feet of records. The paper records that were deemed important for preservation were rehoused into 4 acid free boxes and processed into labeled folders with folder level descriptions for the materials within. The rest of the collection consists of 6 boxes of unprocessed auction records from Densho's early 2000s golf and general auction fundraisers, 2 boxes of unprocessed photos, and the oversized records box. The boxes of photos consist of approximately ~1500 photos related to Densho such as event pictures, staff photos, and photos from oral history interviews. These photos have not yet been rehoused and are not currently in photo sleeves.

Arrangement

There is no particular organization arrangement within the Densho Legacy Archive. Materials in the 4 acid free boxes are described at a folder level with dates, a detailed description in the file description field, general notes, and a folder title corresponding to the records types housed within. Golf and auction records are stored in boxes 5-10, and the unhoused photos are grouped into purely Densho photos in box 11 and JACC photos that are Densho related in box 12. The records in the oversized box are not in folders but do contain item level descriptions.
