

4-F DRAFT TO BE EXPLAINED

State draft officials expect to have full details of the mechanics for reviewing 4-Fs not later than tomorrow, Col. Walter J. DeLong, state Selective Service director, said today at Camp Murray.

"While we know all 4-F cases will be reviewed," Colonel DeLong said, "we have not yet received instructions from the War Relocation Authority as to the machinery. Full details for handling reclassification should be in our hands by tomorrow morning."

All 1-A's Called

The call was every available 1-A in the state has been called to fill the February quota. "If the quota is increased," DeLong added, "it will be necessary to dip into the reserve of less essential workers who heretofore have not been able to meet military induction requirements."

Colonel DeLong said there is widespread misconception of the attitude of most 4-Fs. He said he has been deluged with requests from 4-Fs and men in the 38-to-45 age group for aid in getting into the armed forces.

It is true that some of them have failed to do anything to help the war effort," the colonel said, "but there are just as many or more who would be in uniform right now if they could be."

Many of these men are in highly essential jobs, where they can do a lot more good than they could in the Army. However, there are others who might be put to more use if the Army would lower its physical standards and resume accepting men over 38. Then they could be given a choice of getting into war work or being inducted."

Two 13-year-old boys, who had "borrowed" an automobile from the father of one of the lads to go bear hunting, were back home today after county detectives yesterday halted the trip.

Detectives William Freeman and Emory Hale were cruising in the Tacoma Highway when they noticed a Tacoma-bound automobile driven by a small boy. They stopped the car and found the boys, who had run away from home less than an hour before. In the car were spare clothing, groceries and hunting knives.

1944 Biggest Year Here For Rail Express

The 1944 business volume of the Railway Express Agency, Inc., in the Seattle area was "tremendous," L. O. Head, president of the firm, said here today.

"We thought 1929 was the peak year, but last year exceeded that record by more than 30 percent," Head said.

Head is visiting branch offices of the firm throughout the country. "I am especially interested in the Seattle branch," Head said, "because it was here that you got the first impetus of war business. Even before the war began, Seattle was feeling the results of lend-lease activity."

"However, the business here has been handled exceptionally in spite of all the difficulties brought about by the war. The railroads have given us splendid service."

Head remarked upon the increase in activity in Seattle since his last visit here three years ago. "I also notice that the city is full of help wanted signs," Head said. "Evidently you're even further from solving the manpower shortage than we are in New York."

His company's biggest "headache," the executive said, is lack of experienced help.

"At the time of Pearl Harbor," Head said, "we had 47,000 full-time employees all over the country. Since then we have lost 21,600 to the armed forces, but have increased the total of employees to 77,000."

Polynesians, intelligent and widely traveled. Many of the boys and girls had been to Japanese schools on Yap, and many of their elders could speak a few words of English, French, Spanish, German, Japanese, Yaw and Latin.

Latin Nearly Perfect
"When our first mass was said, their Latin was nearly perfect," the Navy chaplain who now conducts their services commented.

Arrival of the Catholic chaplain did much to win the friendship of the natives, who mistrusted the American troops because the daughter of the atoll chief had been fatally wounded during the pre-invasion bombardment. Later the natives were enough coconut that to fill 20 Navy trucks, in order to construct a large chapel.

An old man named Mau, one of the island's most traveled inhabitants who had once visited Hong Kong, insisted, however, that his English was superior to the visiting chaplain's variety.

"Father no speak good English," Mau said. "Father speak American."

Mark S. Sullivan, News Writer, Is Called by Death

Mark Stephen Sullivan, one of Seattle's best-known newspapermen, died at Firlan Sanatorium this forenoon. He was 38 years old.

Mr. Sullivan was a reporter for The Times for ten years before he entered the sanatorium in August, 1943. He was an "easy" writer, and was at his best when a story was suited to whimsy. He wrote The Times' labor articles for many years, and also helped report several sessions of the Legislature.

Editor of The Columns
A graduate of Garfield High School, where he was on the baseball team, Mr. Sullivan was a reporter for The Aberdeen World after leaving the University of Washington in 1928. He was editor of The Columns, campus magazine, while at the University.

Mr. Sullivan was the son of J. D. Sullivan, retired Seattle police officer, and Mrs. Sullivan, who resided at Kenndale. He was born in Britannia, B. C., December 26, 1906. He came to this country with his parents as an infant.

Mr. Sullivan's home was at 13230 Second Ave. N. W., where his widow, Estelle, and his 16-year-old son, Mark, Jr., a Queen Anne High School pupil, reside.

Surviving besides his parents and family are a sister, Mrs. E. S. Johnson of Seattle, and a brother, Philip, who is overseas with the Seabees.

Organist Plays Melodies For Capitol Crowd

By A STAFF CORRESPONDENT
OLYMPIA, Jan. 10.—Providing a soft and soothing accompaniment to the legislative session, a concert of organ music is being given twice daily in the State Reception room, situated in the wing of the Capitol between the Senate and the House.

The organist is Philip Raboin, of American River, California. Before he was given a medical discharge last year, he served as a sergeant in the Army Air Forces, teaching instrument flying at Lemoore, Calif., Army Air Field.

Raboin, a pleasant, blond young man, was "discovered" by Lieut. Gov. Victor A. Meyers, who heard him play last fall at a Democratic rally in Klickitat and invited him to be court musician at the Legislature.

A friend brought it from Klickitat on a truck and will take it back when the session is over.

Concerts are given from 12 o'clock noon to 1 o'clock; from 4 to 4:30, and in the evening. The audience is composed mostly of wives of senators and representatives, wives of other statehouse workers and their friends, who get bored sitting in the galleries of the Senate and the House, where there is nothing but talk, talk, talk.

Raboin plays mostly popular selections, to suit his audience and not the splendid architecture of the Capitol, which has more of a Bach quality to it. Favorite requests are sentimental ballads like "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "Star Dust," "Tea for Two," and "My Wild Irish Rose," which yesterday he played so sweetly that one lady wept.

Raboin also will be glad to play "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls" for any disconsolate office-seeker who might happen along.

Jap's Tenant Plans to Fight Owner's Return

Mrs. Simon Hebert, tenant of the Seattle home of Henry T. Kubota, Japanese-American business man who returned to Seattle yesterday, said today she plans to circulate petitions in the neighborhood to protest any move Kubota may make to evict her so he can reoccupy his house.

Mrs. Hebert said two women Boeing employees, Viola Simonson and Julia Heine, who live with her, have told her that if they have to move out of the house, at 341 19th Ave., they "probably will have to quit our jobs and go back to Minnesota."

"They both said they don't believe they will be able to stay here and work if they have to move," Mrs. Hebert said. She added that Joe Lucero, a shipyard worker, and his wife and daughter, who also live with her, may return to their Duval farm if they are evicted.

Kubota, who came here from Denver, said he regretted making the Heberts and the others move, but added he believes it would be more difficult for him to obtain another house than it will be for them. Kubota, 43 years old, owns three hotels here, including the Seattle Hotel. Accompanying him in his return were Setsugo Hosokawa, 60, a real-estate dealer, and Paul Matsumoto, former operator of a grocery.
