BUTTER SUPPLY TO BE SMALLER

Seattle's butter supply will be even smaller after February 1, War Food Administration officials said today, because on that date the government set-aside program again will become effective. The government's share will be 20 per cent of the butter manufactured.

An increase in the supply can be expected about April 1, after the end of the seasonal slump in production, the W. F. A. said.

Aberdeen Angus cattle, from Scottish sires, are now highly prized in Argentina.

As a vital weapon of war, wire rope will speed the day when her husband, Pfc. Bernard Gehweiler, with the Army Engineers in the Philippines, will return to civilian life. For Private Gehweiler has written his wife that he has used the rope she helped produce, and has seen the heads of nails she drove in the flanges of those reels.

CLARENCE T. ARAI HOME FOR VISIT

Clarence T. Arai, Seattle-born Japanese attorney who was evacuated with others of his race almost three years ago, was back "home" today, visiting old scenes and shaking hands with old friends.

"I'm just here to renew old acquaintances and that's the whole purpose of my visit," said Arai. "I want to look over the situation in Seattle before I plan to return permanently. It has been a long time since I went away, now."

Arai, well-known lawyer who was active in public and civic affairs, was evacuated in May, 1942; first went to the relocation center at Puyallup and then to the Mimidoka Relocation Center at Hunt, Idaho, where he now makes his home.

The attorney's wife and 8-year-old son remained in Idaho while he visited Seattle. He expects to leave Saturday, after a week's stay. Graduate of Franklin High School, Arai was graduated from the University of Washington in 1924, and practiced law here. He served on the City Library Board and was a captain of Infantry in the Organized Reserves. He is 43 years old.

Child Labor Breaks Law Special to The Times. VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 25.—(AP)—Parents must be made aware that they are breaking the law when they permit children to work long hours in bowling alleys, at store deliveries and magazine sales, it was pointed out in a child labor survey conducted in elementary schools by the Vancouver Welfare Council.

Navy Wants More
Mrs. Gehweiler only wishes there were more reels of wire rope going out of her factory every day. So do her employers. And, most important of all, so does the Navy.

There are many workers at the plant who have special reasons for working with extra zeal. There is Antonio Gimenez, 1044 Hudson St., for instance, who has one son, Antonio, Jr., in the Navy; another son, Jacinto, in the Merchant Marine, and a daughter, Josephine, who is a Wac private. And there are Mr. and Mrs. Teles Scott, 9813 18th Ave. S. W., who work side by side at the plant and who feel certain their work will hasten the return of their son, Ronald, a Navy aviation ordnanceman.

More Help Needed
Pleas for increased output come to the factory from the War Production Board. But—the manpower (or womanpower) is lacking. "If we could only find 68 more men we'd be able to put on three eight-hour shifts, instead of the two ten-hour shifts we're working now," explains F. J. Palank, factory official. "We need them, badly."

Broderick & Bascom's Seattle plant (one of three in the country) is loaded with "at least 98 per cent of work for the Navy and armed services" and the rest of the output carries high priorities. The firm's critical manpower problem has drawn the attention of Kenneth B. Colman, regional W. P. B. director, and head of the new community-wide War Production Council, designed to attack a variety of urgent war problems.

Navy and merchant marine ships require large amounts of wire rope, in varying sizes, it is pointed out by Colman. Wire rope is needed for rigging, for cargo slings, stout mooring cables, for towing barges and landing craft, for protective torpedo and submarine nets, and for a host of other vital uses.

"We must have it," declares Colman, emphatically. The Broderick & Bascom plant is turning out about 1,000,000 pounds of wire rope monthly. If the plant could change its operations to the desired three shifts, it could step up this output by at least 250,000 pounds, declare Palank and W. J. Hanson, sales engineer.

Colman, in pointing out the factory's needs, commented that the work performed is virtually all indoors, in warm and well-lighted areas. The firm now employs between 165 and 175 people, many of whom are women, who perform tasks formerly done by men.
