Four persons were victims of sluggers and fencers last night. One victim reported he "had a drink" with a stranger and later woke up without clothes or shoes.

A 29-year-old soldier was jailed with charge after he and two other soldiers were seen robbing Douglas Short, 618 1/2 Weller St., about 9:30 o'clock after slugging Short with an empty bottle.

Short was taken to Harborview County Hospital with cuts and a head injury.

Drink Is Costly

Police said Harold M. Shettel told them he "went out with a fellow to have a drink and woke up later without any clothes or shoes on." He was picked up by police in the Queen Anne district and taken to his hotel. Police believed he had been drugged.

E. A. Danielson of Everett reported that a thief stole his wallet at the Central Stage Terminal and rifled it of $132. He found the empty wallet in a washroom.

Peter Traitor King, Asserts Yugo Premier

BELGRADE, Aug. 11.—(AP)—Blagoje Meskovic, premier of the Yugoslav Federal Administration, declared in a debate in the Yugoslav parliament yesterday that King Peter was a "traitor king."

Referring to Peter's announcement in London that he was withdrawing authority granted to three regents to act in the name of the king, Meskovic said:

"His last act, which will be recorded in the list of crimes he committed in the last four years against our people. I am convinced the day will come when he will return to this country, not as a ruling monarch but rather as a traitor king upon whom our people will inflict just punishment."

Pipe of Peace Smoked With Hanford Tribe

RICKLAND, Aug. 11.—(AP)—Army engineers who supervised the building of Hanford project's atom mills saved their scalps by making peace with a tribe of 30 independent Indians.

Col. Franklin T. Matthias, project commandant, revealed today that all dealings with persons removed from the 250,000-acre exclusion area the most careful consideration was given an almost extinct tribe known as the Priest Rapids Indians.

These Red men, headed by Chief Johnny Buck, were insistent that their fishing rights be preserved regardless of what was built at Hanford. They didn't want to join Indians on other reservations. They listened to no talk about better hunting grounds in other places.

"We offered them a pretty good settlement at one time in the dickering," Col. Matthias said. "The Indians started down the offer."

"We no want dollars. We want fish," Chief Buck was quoted as replying.

To preserve the intent of a treaty signed during territorial days, the Priest Rapids tribe was given permission to pass certain guarded areas to its fishing holes along the Columbia River.

"We had to see that white men didn't point up to pass through as Indians," Col. Matthias added. "So we made an arrangement with Chief Buck to personally identify each tribesman admitted to the river in our areas."

As a result of this peace pipe smoking, the Indians are getting their fish and the Hanford project is getting privacy. And the engineers still have their scalps.

TWO ARE HELD IN MURDER PROBE

A Seattle hotel owner and the woman manager of the hotel were being held for investigation in the county jail today after she disclosed that the man had been seen Tuesday night with Walter B. Foley, Jr., 22-year-old former undercover investigator for the Washington State Liquor Control Board, who was murdered early Wednesday morning.

Sheriff's deputies were told Foley was seen leaving the hotel with the suspect at 4 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The hotel recently was raided by police for illegal liquor operations. Foley, an honorably discharged Naval Air Corps cadet, worked for the Liquor Board for six months and resigned about three weeks ago when his "usefulness" ended because he had become known to illegal liquor dealers.

Sheriff Harlan S. Callahan is now convinced Foley was murdered at the spot where his body was found near the Englewood Golf Club. Detectives yesterday found two bullets, matching those in Foley's body, buried in the ground there. Two persons living nearby reported hearing shots about 6 o'clock the morning of the tragedy.

Callahan believes one man did the shooting, but that a number of other persons knew Foley was to be murdered. Several persons sought for questioning have "skipped town," Callahan said.

Britons, Long Held by Japs, Elated as They Hear News

RONALD MacINTYRE AND HIS WIFE

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald MacIntyre had to stifle their elation somewhat upon hearing the news of Japan's reported acceptance of the Potsdam terms yesterday as the MacIntyres had a five-hour wait at the immigration station.

But by the time they were settled in a room at the Red Cross Chapter House, 1551 Tenth Ave. N., the MacIntyres expressed mixed emotions of relief, joy and hating recollections of imprisonment by the Japs.

Mr. and Mrs. MacIntyre, British subjects, are on their way back to England for a visit after eight years in Manila. During the last three they skimped, scraped and suffered at the hands of the Japanese. Their exit from Manila followed months after the liberation of Allied prisoners because MacIntyre, officer in the British-owned Hongkong & Shanghai Bank at the time Japan took Manila, had to wait until a new staff arrived from England to take the places of those who had been prisoners.

After two days at Villamor Hall, a Manila University building, where the Japanese placed 500 prisoners without food or beds, Mr. and Mrs. MacIntyre were moved to Santo Tomas. They were together until May, 1943, when MacIntyre, with 800 other men, was transferred to Los Banos. His wife, with 200 other women, joined him later and there they stayed until American paratroopers and Filipino guerrillas freed them and their 2,150 fellow prisoners last February 23.

"I had been trying to lose weight before the Philippines fell into Jap hands," MacIntyre recalled. "I had lost 30 pounds dieting. And then I was sorry. I lost another 40 pounds at Santo Tomas. I got down to 136 pounds, but shortly before we were liberated I gained eight pounds back on six coconuts which I traded for my wrist watch."

Mrs. MacIntyre got about nine pounds of rice for her watch.

Mrs. MacIntyre, who admitted she had "never done a bit of cooking before in my life," became an artist at concocting dishes from the meager supplies which she and her husband obtained. She made cake from six tablespoons of mush, saved from breakfast; two "spoons" of sugar, a little soda, a bit of margarine and a whole grated coconut.

"I don't suppose I'd care for any of it now," she laughed. "But it tasted wonderful then."

Surrender news will have added meaning to Mrs. MacIntyre whose parents are prisoners in Hongkong, and whose sister and brother-in-law also are interned in Shanghai.

Bonneville Sues Puget Sound Power

A civil action for $272,739.96 against the Puget Sound Power & Light Company, instituted by Paul J. Beaver, Bonneville Power administrator, was filed late yesterday in United States District Court.

The complaint charges that this amount represented the balance due Bonneville on power delivered to Puget Sound Power & Light Company between November, 1944, and July, 1945.

According to Bonneville authorities, the company has continued to receive power since expiration of a contract last November, but has refused to pay in conformity with applicable rate schedules.

The company has paid $1,028,368.48; the government wants $1,298,925.50. Penalty and interest make up the balance for which the suit was brought.

Frank McLaughlin, company president, declared the suit grew out of unfair action of the B. P. A. in raising its rates. He explained that prior to November, 1944, power had been purchased at a lower rate and that the company feels it is entitled to continue to use power at the former figure.
