ORTING VETERAN DIES ON HIS JOURNEY HOME

Returning to their homes in high spirits, after having visited the great reunion of the Blue and the Gray on the historic battlefield. Washington veterans of the battle of Gettysburg were plunged into 5rier by the unexpected death of 10. W. H. Rugs, who served with the Twelth Massachusetts regiment. Colonel Rugg answered the last roil call as the veterans crossed the Idaho-Washington boundary line yesterday.

Colonel Rugg was accredited with having fired the first shot at Gettysburg in the battle that has gone down in American history as the greatest of the Civil War. His body was taken to the Old Soldiers' Home at Orting, where he has resided for many years. He was 13 years old. During the war he, spent twenty-six months, in Andersonville prison.

Coionel Rugg had a premonition that his Journey to the battlefield where the reunion was held would be his last.

"I feel that the heat in the East will finish me," he said shortly before leaving. "I know that I never shall finish this campaign, but I cannot miss this opportunity to greet the boys, even at the sacrifice of my life."

At noon resterday Colonel Rugg complained of feeling ill, and did not enter the dilning car for luncheon. Soon after the death of Colonel Rugs physician accompanying the party did everything possible, but the aged veteran.

mantle of gloom over the closing hours of the journey, which ended last night. The return of the veterans was not spectacular. A few friends were at the station to meet them. As soon as they alighted from the train they bade each other good-bye, went their various ways, and the reunion of the Heroes of Gettysburg was at an end. Hessithan a dozen left the train at Seattle. Others continued on their way to their homes in other parts of the state.

Of the 161 veterans who left Washington to attend the reunion there were only a few who had belonged to the same regiments during the great struggle. Meeting with friends of former years, the veterans said, was the pleasantest feature of the great encampment. There was an unanimity of oninion among them as to the splendid hospitality with which they were treated while at Gettysburg.

"Everything possible was done to make us comfortable," said one of the veterans, and it fell good to clasp the hands of our former foes and to review the incidents of the battle. Gettysburghas changed somewhat, but we could still trace the lines of the great control of the great of the great control of the was able to pick out the spot where he stood when the patch was ended, but almost every one of us was able to pick out the spot where he stood when the patch commenced, and to trace the various actions.

Boys All Old Now.

The men we knew as boys are all old and gray now, and the faces of many were missing from the ranks. We thought of our messmates and the fellows with whom we chummed during the long struggle—with whom we shared whatever of good or bad fortune came our way—and many of us; suffered a pang of disappointment when we were unable to find their faces among those marked 'present' at the reunion."

Among the veterans who left the train at the King Street station last night were: Robert Barton, 226 Boren Avenue North, once of the Eighty-sixth New York regiment; A. Lyons, Bremerton, Seventeenth United States Infantry: Charles Marsh, 9863 Sixty-second Avenue South, Sixth Michigan Cavalry: William Phillips, George Strong and J. H.
