The Times Special Service.

COLFAX, Wash, Saturday, June 28.—
The Democratic county convention held here today reaffirmed allegiance to the Kansas City platform, demanded the removal of the tariff on grain bags, endorsed Governor McBride's attitude on railroads and pledged its candidates to the Legislature to support a commission bill and not accept passes; favored direct legislation as adopted in Oregon; favored the election of United States Senators by direct vote, and commended the administration of Democratic county officers, all of whom were renominated by acclamation, as were all candidates with but three exceptions.

There was a fight for the chairmanship, the McCroskey faction winning, after which the convention was harmonious. The following ticket was nominated:

Monument at Choisy-le-Roi for the Author of "La Marseillaise."

Special Cable to New York World.

PARIS, Saturday, June 28.—The inauguration of a third tomb to Rouget de Lisle, author of the "Marseillaise"—for he has had two—takes place soon, at Choisy-le-Roi. He was buried in June, 1836, his friends covering his grave with flowers and singing in chorus the stanza of the national flymn beginning: "Amour sacre de la patrie."

"Amour sacre de la patrie."

Ten years later Gen. Blein removed the body to an inclosure on his land, at Thiais-les-Choisy, and placed it in a tomb of which the medallion was sculptured by David d'Angers. A crown of flowers was placed on it that had been gathered in the garden when Rouget de Lisle made his first steps.

Now he is to be buried for a third time in a tomb raised by admirers at Choisy-le-Roi.

LOVE COST HIM A FORTUNE.

Young French Physician Disinherited for Wedding an Actress.

The Times Special Service.

NEW YORK, Saturday, June 28.—Eloping with an American actress and adopting the stage as a profession for himself has cost Dr. Edouard Durand, a young Parisian, a cosy fortune, unless he goes back to France and wins a contest over his father's will and testament. Even though Durand's wife since has died, his family would not become reconciled to him. He has decided to remain on the stage and next season will go into vaudeville. Durand last Saturday received word of the death of his father. The will was read today and the expatriate received a cable from his brother saying his name was not mentioned in the document. The latter estimates that the omission costs him about 200,000 francs. The Frenchman's wife was Helen Huntley, who went to London as a modest member of Alice Neilson's company. Durand was in the British metropolis at the time as witness in a suit at law in which his medical partner, said to be a ceicbrated practicing physician of Paris was involved. He saw Miss Huntley one night and within a week had managed to secure an introduction to her. Within another week he was for marriage and life in Paris, but she refused to be wooed away from the glamor of the stage.

The young woman returned to the United States and Durand followed, forsaking family and medicine. Durand peresent a younger son to this country to argue with the infatuated physician upon the folly of his way. When the brother arrived he found that Durand and Miss Huntley had made a special trip to the altar. Their wedding present from the Durand family was an excitable but weberners and become of discipators. Durand family was an excitable but vehement cablegram of disinheritance. PORTLAND, Ore., Saturday, June 28.—
The mysterious disappearance of Vic Schilling, city ticket agent of the O. R. (N. Company, has created a sensation in railroad and social circles. He left Portland last Saturday night ostensibly for a business trip to Spokane, and said that he would return in a day or so. Not a word has been heard of him since.

He has left a responsible position without notifying his superiors, and a wife, who is visiting in Los Angeles. Various theories are given to explain his disappearance, among them the suggestion of suicide or foul play. So far as is known the missing man had no family troubles.

Whitman County Dem- Big Irrigation Company An Influx of Coolies From Hawaii.

> try Evaded by Contract Laborers.

The Times Special Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, June 28.—
More than 200 Japanese arrived here yesterday in the steerage of the steamer. China. They came from Honolulu and the Hawaiian Islands, where they have been working on the plantations.

This influx of coolle labor from the Hawaiian Islands is alarming the immigration authorities, but they state that they are powerless to stem the tide. Late steamers from the Orient have brought hundreds of Japanese, who come here from the Hawaiian Islands. The immigration officials are unable to deny the Asiatics landing because of their coming from a port of the United States. In addition to bringing the Japanese from Hawaii to this country the Oriental liners carry large numbers of contract laborers from Japan to Honolulu. On her last voyage the Hongkong Maru landed over 400 Japanese in Honolulu. The demand for contract laborers on the sugar plantations is probably responsible for the large number of Japanese who are landed in Honolulu. As a subterfuge these coolies were kept for a month or so on the plantations and then taken to the mainland. The Hawaiian Islands thus provide a means for the laborers to evade the exclusion laws of this country.

EVERY MAN AN ENGINEER.

So Says the Professor in a Talk About Proper Fuel.

"Yes," repeated the Professor, "every man owns an engine. You're inclined to doubt the statement, I see. But that's because your mind reverts immediately to those mechanical combinations of man owns an engine. You're inclined to doubt the statement, I see. But that's because your mind reverts immediately to those mechanical combinations of wheels and rods and valves which make machinery go. If I tell you that the engine is out of repair you conjure up at once the thought of a mill with the hands idle and the person in charge hustling around to get things moving again, because every moment that the engine isn't running means financial loss.

"Huxley, the eminent physiologist, says the human body is a very complicated and finely balanced engine. When all its parts are in perfect order and sufficient and proper fuel is used, the machinery runs along smoothly, without a hitch. In order to keep the machine in good condition, parts which have become worn have to be replaced by new ones.

"So it is in the human body; the tissues which have become worn and used up in the daily work of the system have to be constantly renewed. This is done by means of the food which we consume, certain elements of which go to repair the broken-down tissue, while other elements, equally important, are used entirely to furnish energy, just as coal when burned can heat water to form steam and this in its turn can be used to run an engine.

"That food element which repairs waste must form a part of all our diet. This element is found in all animal tissues and in many vegetables. We are most familiar with it as lean meat. It may therefore be called the meat element. It is possible to maintain life through this element alone, since it is able not only to repair waste, but to furnish energy as well.

"For the great majority of people, however, a pure meat diet will cause disorders of the stomach and bowels, such as indigestion and constipation and finally of the liver, the kitcherys and the blood. This happens, because, in the first place, the ders of the stomach and bowels, such as indigestion and constipation and finally of the liver, the kidneys and the blood. This happens, because, in the first place, the meat element must undergo further preparation or digestion, as it is called, before it can be taken up by the blood and carried to the tissues where is is to be used. The stomach and bowels, where this preparation takes place can only take care of a certain amount of this element. When more is brought to them, they become overworked—and a machine that is overworked breaks down.

"Although a certain amount of the meat element is necessary to repair tissue waste, most of the energy used by the body can be supplied through other food elements. These are represented by the fats of our food and by that element which forms the principal constituent of potatoes and which we may call the poat to element. Certain regentless contain mot only the porato element, the also the meat element as well. The octoals are especially tich with a large the especial to the the same potatoes and which we may call the potation element. Certain regentlies contain not only the potato element, but also the meat element as well. The cereals are especially rich in this element, and among these the one which contains it in the best proportion is the wheat kernel.

"It is from the grain of the wheat that 'Force' food is prepared, in such a manner that the full value of the meat element is retained and made available. This element is present in just the right quantity to built up and strengthen the tissues of the body and yet not in so great amount as to disturb digestion. In respect to this element, therefore, as well as in respect to the potato element. Force' should be an ideal food for all individuals, not only for the healthy and strong, but also on this account for the invalid, for the sufferer from indigestion and from bowel troubles, since the machinery employed by the body for the preparation of this element is not evertaxed and therefore works under the most favorable conditions.

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. One way to avoit sickness is to take care of the body while it is well and keep it so. An important means to this end is to furnish the digestive apparatus with proper food. "Force' is such a food."
