The Big Show Is Here

International Newspaper Window Display Week

It is now going on. Many of our own merchants are participating as anyone can see by looking at the windows filled with newspaper advertised products and bearing the signs giving the reason for their presence.

When thousands of dealers in nearly 400 of the principal cities of North America concentrate in one week on one kind of a display window, it comes pretty near being The Big Show.

It is in fact the most impressive advertising demonstration ever held anywhere—the visualizing of the super power of newspaper advertising.

This year Window Week shows a greater variety of products than ever before, for many more general advertisers have come into the newspapers in 1916 than in any previous year.

This year more retailers are taking part because of their desire to convince manufacturers that the only kind of advertising that helps them is direct newspaper advertising.

This big show—International Newspaper Window Display Week—is well worth the study of anyone interested in the great problems of advertising and merchandising.
