CLEVELAND, O., Thursday, Dec. 21.—
The Iron Trade Review today says:
More general strength is being displayed in the fron and steel situation than at any time in several months. This is due in large part to heavy accumulation of orders for future delivery, a considerable part of which has been acquired in recent weeks.

vised the sking not to accept the imperial crown and, on the occasion of the granting of the Prussian constitution, he protested against the introduction into Prussia of parliamentary institutions and, most especially, against the voting of the budget by the Landtag.

From the moment of his accession to power he rose superior to the opposition of the chamber. Unable to secure a vote of appropriations, he invoked the principle of the "constitutional gap"—and, indeed, it was true that the constitution had not made provision for a case where one of the three governing organs—King, House of Lords and Chamber of Deputies—was not in accord with the Ralston yesterday afternoon and a permanent injunction was denied.

Mr. Howes' meter was damaged by hot water backing into it from the faith—belief in all these things was inspired in Bismarck, particularly by the life and actions of Frederick II., whom he was to hold up later as a model for the future William II.

In Bismarck's eyes, Prussia, since the death of the great Frederick, had not shown real national tendencies; in fact, her destiny, as he saw it, was not so much to grow constantly as to assure herself of predominance in Germany; she must not forget that it was war to the death between herself and Austria, that one of these two must vanish from the German stage.

Plans Against Austria. Mr. Howes' meter was damaged by hot water backing into it from the water heating system of the house, and the city billed the owner for repairs. On Mr. Howes' refusal to pay for the repairs, the city shut off the water supply, and Mr. Howes obtained a temporary injunction in court which compelled the Water Department to turn on the water until trial of the case.

Plans Against Austria.

Prussia's duty became clear to Bismarck in the course of his long mission as plenipotentiary representative of his country at the Diet of Frankfort, and he expressed concisely, in a memoriat addressed to the king of Prussia in 1858, his ideas as to the necessity of launching a Prussian-Independent-German poilcy. Austria, he pointed out, was seeking to obtain the hegemony in the German confederation by invoking the constitution; it was necessary, therefore, to destroy the confederation; a victorious war against Austria had become an unavoidable necessity.
