NEW MINE UNION WOULD OUST HEAD

Illinois State Convention Passes Resolution to End Recognition of John Watt.

By Associated Press. BELLEVILLE, Ill., Monday, Oct. 28.—Internal dissension in a newly organized National Miners' Union flared up here yesterday when the state convention of the organization unanimously adopted a resolution calling upon miners to cease recognizing John Watt of Springfield, Ill., as national president of the union.

The resolution charges that Watt "is an enemy and is endeavoring to split the union," and demands that "in the name of the union he cease activities in the State of Illinois."

The action of the convention climaxed a heated debate that continued throughout the day. It started when Henry Crobblesley of West Frankfort, Ill., state secretary, took the floor and denounced Watt, charging him with "corrupting the union with his policies and refusing to follow the policies as laid down by the national executive board."

Mrs. Niemyer, reiterating her belief that her husband was a victim of foul play, called on Prosecutor Columbia again this forenoon for a complete investigation.

BOY SLAYER PUTS UP SELF-DEFENSE, BUT IT IS DENIED

Companions of Louis Birkel Declare That He Made No Threatening Gesture Toward Emerson Price.

Emerson Price, 24 years old, struck Louis Birkel in self-defense and a petty argument ended in unintentional death, Emerson told a coroner's jury this forenoon.

Birkel died last Tuesday after having being struck from the porch of the Price home, 1560 29th Ave. W., to the concrete sidewalk Monday evening.

According to Emerson's story, Birkel, accompanied by Fred Blake, 15, of 2918 Magnolia Blvd., and John Rankin, 2705 W. Hayes St., came to the Price home and accused him of protecting their use of an interfering transmission set.

"I'm not the man you want, I'll call him," Emerson testified he said, and called his father, O. E. Price.

"What are you going to do?" Emerson said he asked them.

"We'll show you," Birkel said, and stepped forward, fists clenched," Emerson testified.

Emerson struck out with his left hand, just a light blow, he explained, and Birkel fell backward from the porch.

Young Rankin and Blake testified they went to the Price home to explain to Mr. Price that the interference of a transmission set.

"Birkel just stood there," they said, "and Emerson knocked him off the porch."

RAIL MISHAP BRINGS IMPROVEMENT PLEA

Workmen today had completed clearing the wreckage of two heavily loaded Northern Pacific coal cars which plunged through the aged trestle work on Railroad Avenue near the Bell Street Dock and toppled into Elliott Bay early yesterday.

While railroad officials, after an investigation, were inclined to blame the crash to a defective wheel or switch, the accident was taken by city officials to emphasize the need of immediate repairs on the waterfront traffic artery.

Plans for the permanent improvement of Railroad Avenue, virtually completed at the City Hall, contemplate doing away with all trestles such as that involved in the accident. They provide also for replacement of the present plank surfacing with permanent paving and call for a seawall along the whole downtown waterfront.

A start towards the actual work was declared today by E. K. Leblond, chief clerk of the City Engineering Department, to be awaiting the outcome of negotiations with the general railroad companies on their share of the cost of the improvements. It was stated also that absence of a complete agreement with lease holders on waterfront property belonging to the state is delaying the project.

Arrests May Follow Police Ban Against Commission Dances

DRASTIC police action to stop the operation of dance halls where women and girls are employed on commission to dance with men patrons was in prospect for today.

Chief of Police Louis J. Forbes announced that he would arrest the proprietors of every dance hall found still to be running this evening in violation of his orders, issued a week ago, revoking their permits.

The warning came immediately after another meeting of Chief Forbes with the license committee of the City Council at which he was told that he had full authority to stop the dance for operating in violation of the law. The law provides that they must have both a permit from the police and a license from the Council.

Prince von Buelow was a former ambassador to Italy and held other diplomatic posts in Europe. In 1900 he was made chancellor, and subsequently was put often to appearances before the Reichstag in defense of the Emperor.

He married the Italian Princess at Bologna in 1888, eloping with her when she was the wife of his chief, the Count von Dönhoff, at the Prussian legation at Dresden. The scan-

$20,000 DONATION BELIES CRITICISM OF COLLEGE VALUE

By Associated Press. NEW YORK, Monday, Oct. 28.—The faith of Floyd L. Cur-liss, banker, in the value of a college education is attested by a $20,000 gift to St. Lawrence University.

The Daily Princetonian recently quoted him as saying a college education unfits a boy for a business career. In a letter accompanying the gift, he expresses the wish that every boy and girl in the land could have a college education.

Excited by the event was a long time in clearing. When the war started in 1914, Von Buelow issued an appeal to all Germans to "defend" the Fatherland. A few days later his brother was killed in the fighting before Liege, Belgium. In December of that year Von Buelow went to Rome as German ambassador, a post he had filled years before. Within a month he was reported to have spent $400,000 in a pro-German publicity campaign to keep Italy out of the war and was charged with attempting to overthrow the Salandra ministry.

Upon Italy's declaring war on Austria in May, 1915, Von Buelow left Rome with his staff and returned to Berlin.

Democrats Quit Old-Time Tariff Policy

(Continued From Page One.) ceiling the Civil War; tariff for revenue only, which was the battle cry of Grover Cleveland; tariff for revenue, with incidental protection, which was the position to which the party advanced between Cleveland and the Underwood tariff law of the first Wilson term; the Underwood law, which provided for more protection than the party previously had stood for, and now a competitive tariff, to give protection to American industry as a whole—this is the route the Democratic Party has taken during the past seventy-odd years in its march from free trade to protection.

Unlike that situation that existed in those early days, the industries of the country are no longer confined to New England and the states of the Middle Atlantic Coast. Both the Middle and the Far West are rapidly becoming industrialized and more recently industrialism has taken a firm foothold in the South, which has grown more in wealth and secured greater prosperity in a generation than during all the years since the beginning of the Civil War.

In these sections, where agriculture once was king, manufacturing is giving employment to many millions of men and women and has enabled the states in question to tap the enormous natural resources they possess. In these sections, also, agriculture is now demanding protection on a scale much higher than the most grasping industrialists ever have depended up to the writing of the Hawley-Smoot bill. Agriculture now says it wants the entire domestic market for the American farmer, which doubtless furnished Senator Simmons with the thought that the Republicans had finally gone protection mad and were fixing duties so high as to exclude many kinds of goods of foreign production.

Under these conditions, it is not surprising that the position of the Democratic Party should have changed. The principle of protection has been tried and found satisfactory. No free trade, or even tariff-for-revenue sentiment now exists among any intelligent part of the electorate. Any political party failing to get in step with this sentiment would find itself in time without a following.

The Republicans point out that the charge that they were trying to exclude foreign manufacturers was made without success when the Fordney-McCumber bill was being debated seven years ago.

The Democratic reply is that, while that bill raised duties higher than ever before in the history of the country, the Hawley-Smoot bill makes them still higher and does it at a time when the prosperity, not only of the United States, but of the world as a whole, is more dependent than ever before upon export trade.

I believe that the tariff revision now under way will be remembered by the historians because it marked the complete going over of the Democratic Party to the protection principle, and, as a result, the taking of the tariff out of politics, so far as the main protection principles are concerned.
