

Classes Held At Japanese School Here

School as usual was scheduled today for 700 Japanese children who attend classes daily in the Japanese Language School, 1414 Weller St.

Leaders in the Japanese community here said there has been no thought of discontinuing the school because of United States-Japan hostilities. The Japanese children attend the special school, which is financed by the Japanese community, after classes end in the Seattle public schools. Classes are called at 4 o'clock at the special school, where Yoriaki Nakagawa is principal.

Japanese language is included in lessons for children of the Maryknoll School, a Catholic institution.
