Girl Retracts Charge Union Forbade Speed

DETROIT, April 1.—(AP)—Genevieve Samp, 25-year-old defense worker, denied formally today that she had ever said she was laid off for working too hard, and thus "killing jobs," and was immediately reinstated by her union, Local 270 of the United Automobile Workers, a Congress of Industrial Organization affiliate.

Miss Samp's statement was made public shortly before a special union trial board was to meet to consider her case, which had gained national attention. William Clayton, president of the local, replied with an acknowledgement of her "frank and honest statement" and announced charges would be dropped.

The union had maintained that the grounds for her suspension, and consequent loss of her job, was conduct unbecoming a union member, specifically quarreling with a fellow employee.

"I want to make it clear that I have never at any time stated that the workers in the plan of the National Stamping Company have objected to increasing production in the plant," Miss Samp said today. "Such a statement would not have been true."

Sailor, Heart Ailing, Goes to 'Help Win'

PHILADELPHIA, April 1.—(AP)—Patrick Reynolds, 50 years old, a freighter fireman, was carried into a hospital last night unconscious from a chronic heart ailment. Revived, he insisted on returning to his ship.

"You'll probably die at sea unless you undergo immediate treatment," a doctor warned him.

"We've got to win this war; I'm helping do it," replied Reynolds—and walked away.

Woman, Unaware of Blaze, Is Saved by Alert Neighbor

Mrs. Gladys J. Martinson, North End real-estate dealer, barely escaped with her life at 4:30 o'clock this morning when flames swept her combined office and residence at 6723-25 Greenwood Ave.

Barely ahead of the blaze, believed to have originated in a circulating oil heater in another portion of the one-story brick structure, she was forced to climb through the upper portion of a bedroom window.

Mrs. Martinson's prized toy Boston Bulldog, Jo-Jo, a neighborhood favorite, was suffocated. Jo-Jo had been sleeping in his mistress' room. A canary also died in the smoke.

Unaware of the blaze, Mrs. Martinson was awakened by a neighbor, William H. Sawyer, 6721 Greenwood Ave., who also called the Fire Department.

The interior of the structure was damaged extensively and virtually all household and office equipment was lost. Loss was estimated at $1,800.

Mrs. Martinson and her real-estate sales staff were preparing this morning to open temporary new offices directly across the street, at 6730 Greenwood Ave. Valuable files were saved, although watersoaked.

Ito Appeals for Acquittal; Federal Jury Ponders Case

The trial of Kenji Ito, young Japanese-American attorney, went to jury after a dramatic climax today in United States District Court when the defendant rose and personally appealed to the jury to acquit him on charges of failing to register as an agent for aJpan.

Ito spoke briefly but eloquently after his attorney, Henry Clay Agnew, concluded the first argument for the defense.

"I'd rather live in this country behind bars than in another country where dictators hold the olive branch in oine hand and the dagger in the other," Ito said. "If you convict me, I will know that it is the verdict of Americans."

Ito is being tried before Judge John C. Bowen, who admitted him to practice in the United States Courts in 1936. As Ito faced the jury he stood within a few feet of Assistant United States Attorney Gerald Shucklin, who witnessed his petition at that time. Shucklin has prosecuted the case against him.

Speeches Recalled

Speaking of speeches, which he and other Japanese-Americans had made upholding the Japanese invasion of China, Ito said:

"We wanted to believe there was some excuse, if only to vindicate ourselves in your eyes, because we knew many of the people on the street held us directly responsible for what was happening in China.

"I admit now that I was wrong in the things I said. But if my talks helped in any way to better relations between the American people here and the Japanese people here, I do not regret them.

"If my talks helped the Japanese cause, I do not regret them."

Ito, who was born in Seattle, was taken to Japan as a child but returned to live here as a youth.

"I am an American citizen by deliberate choice and not by accidental birth," he said.

White citizens of the United States were shipping scrap iron to Japan at the same time Ito was making speeches upholding the Japanese invasion of China, Agnew told the jury.

"Who was wrong?" Agnew demanded. "Are the people who sent that scrap charged with anything now? Are our isolationist senators charged with anything for their criticism of defense preparations? No. We have a right to be wrong in the United States, and I think that right should be extended, regardless of race, color or creed."

Agnew argued that there is no such thing as a "self-constituted agent," that Ito would have had no motive for failing to register with the State Department had he been an agent of Japan, and that the government had failed to present any proof that the defendant was an official representative of the Japanese government.

Shucklin Makes Charges

Attorney Shucklin contended, however, that the government had linked Ito with the Japanese government "in dozens and dozens of ways" and that in one instance he had made "intimate arrangements with an official of the Japanese Ministry of Commerce and Industry."

Testimony during the trial disclosed that Ito had talked in his office with a Japanese named Tadeo Yasuda, a commercial representative of the Imperial Japanese government. According to testimony both by Ito and witnesses for the government, Ito arranged that another American-born Japanese, Saburo Hisiyasu, make a series of speeches in Seattle for Yasuda.

Ito, however, testified that he refused to make speeches for Yasuda. One of Yasuda's celling cards was found in Ito's office by an agent of the Federal Bureau of nIvestigation.

"A positive link with Japan," Shucklin commented in his closing arguments. "A government can only act through its official representatives."

Trailing Charge Made

Shucklin argued that in another instance Ito acted directly under orders from Yuki Sato, Japanese consul here, in preparing to trail "a Chinese person" across town from the Union Station. Two government witnesses testified that Ito was in charge of an effort by the three of them to follow the Chinese if he got off a train here. The Chinese did not arrive.

Ito testified that the consul wanted to "walk in on the Chinese" because of a personal difference which had occurred in New Orleans.

"The Union Station incident cannot be explained away," Shucklin argued. "The evidence here shows that Yuki Sato, the Japanese consul, called the defendant and asked him to find out where the Chinese was going. John Fukiyama, an employe of the consulate, was sent there to take instructions from the defendant."

Shucklin told the jury that it was reasonable to suppose that many reports of community club meetings and similar gatherings, which Ito paid attorney friends to secure for him were passed on to the Japnaese consulate.

Attorney Scouts Proof

Agnew, on the other hand, argued that the government had failed to prove in any instances mentioned by Shucklin that Ito acted as an agent.

"Approval or acquiescence of Ito's actions by the Japanese consulate would not have constituted a contract of agency," Agnew said. "I have disagreed with Ito's statements. I have publicly said there was no excuse for Japan's invasion of China. If the Chinese consul had heard me make these statements, he undoubtedly would have encouraged me. But would I then ben an official agent of China?"

The defense attorney argued that if Ito had registered as an agent of Japan with the State Department, he would have been guilty of the felony of giving false information to the government.

Testimony in the case ended yesterday. Ito's entire defense rests upon testimony which he gave during two hours on the witness stand yesterday.

Agnew called only two other witnesses, Ito's pretty young wife and E. E. Lesher, a court reporter. Each was asked only three questions.

Lesher testified that he had taken notes on a convention of the Washington Commonwealth Federation for the consuiate of a foreign country. He did not identify the country. Mrs. Ito told the jury her husband often brought home letters and papers of various kinds from his office.

Dismsisal Refused

Federal Judge John C. Bowen refused a defense motion yesterday afternoon that the case against Ito be dismissed on the grounds of insufficient evidence. The court ruled that the government had produced sufficient evidence to warrant sending the case to the jury.

CALIF. JAPANESE REMOVAL BEGINS

Mass evacuation of 139,000 Japanese along the Pacific Slope began in California today, according to Associated Press dispatches from California, but Army officials indicated that further removal of Japanese from this state would not commence until about April 13.

In Los Angeles, 500 Japanese—from doll-like babies to elderly shopkeepers — climbed aboard a special train today for the government's new internment center at Manzanar.

Without exception, the evacuees seemed philisophically happy. Several said that reports from Manzanar, where advance contingents of Japanese tradesmen went last month to prepare the site, have described the pleasant conditions there.

Evidence of wealth were seen in today's group. Luggage for the most part was modern. Six members of the Hori family, which owned a large department store, were first aboard the train. Mike Hori, son of the store's founder, and his bride were turning the trip into a honeymoon.

All Ages Included

Rouged girls of high school and college age mingled with patient grandmothers, some of them bent under bundles of their possessions.

Brother Theophane, of the Catholic Maryknoll School said goodbye to members of his Boy Scout troops, and told them the troops would be reorganized under his leadership at Manzanar.

A statement issued by the Office of Facts and Figures in Washington, D. C., said that 14,000 Japanese in Washington are to be removed, and 120,000 in California and 4,500 in Oregon.

First evacuation in Washington occurred Monday when 237 Japanese were removed from Bainbridge Island.

The statement said that it is estimated the entire movement will take about six weeks. It added:

"Careful arrangements have been made. The Japanese will come from predetermined zones. A control station will be established in each zone, at which those to be removed may obtain full details. Welfare services will be provided. From the control zones, evacuees will be taken to assembly centers.

Skills to Be Listed

"At the assembly centers, where the exacuees may be held from a few days to two or three months, complete care will be provided and they will be classified according to their skills.

"As soon as resettlement areas can be prepared, Japanese families will be sent to them. They will be given every opportunity to do productive work in agriculture, manufacturing and other types of employment. The resettlement areas are in no sense concentration camps."

The dispatch from Washington said that 16 assembly centers will be established in California, the largest being the present one at the Santa Anita race track. It did not mention how many were to be built in Washington.

Center at Puyallup

While the Army has not confirmed it officially, it is known that one center now is being built at the Western Washington Fair Grounds in Puyallup.

Another is expected to be established in the valley south of Seattle.

The Army Engineer Corps headquarters in Portland, Or., is in charge of building these centers.

Application forms were available in Seattle today for those who seek to be excluded from the evacuation and from complying with the curfew regulations.

They may be obtained at the postoffice, at the office of the United States attorney, at the immigration station and at the Wartime Civil Control Administration office, 808 Second Ave.

German and Italian aliens who will be permitted to remain are those 70 years of age or older; those who paid the filing fee on their petitions for final citizenship prior to last December 7 those who either are dependent on a relative who is in the armed forces of the United States or were dependent on a relative killed since December 7 while serving with the armed forces.

German, Italian and Japanese aliens who are in hospitals and too ill to be moved and those who are inmates of orphanages or institutions for the deaf, dumb or blind also are exempt.

Draft boards will consider each application for exemption and will make recommendation to the Army, which will make the final decision.

C.C.C. Ruling Expected Soon

SALEM, Or., April 1.—Action on a proposal to establish additional Civilian Conservation Camps in Oregon, Washington and California for protection against forest fires probably will be forthcoming from the administration in Washington within 30 days, Elliottt T. Roberts, associate forestor of the United States Forest Service, said today. War Department and administration officials are considering the proposal, but have not made a decision, Roberts said.

D., and Jay Harm of Kalispell, Mont.

Keep Cool and Keep Sawing, Blackstock Advises Builders

Seattle builders awaited word today on an order, predicted here last week, to stop all "nonessential" construction and repairs costing more than $500, but Carl R. Blackstock of Seattle, president of the National Retail Lumbermen's Association, counseled against "scares" in the building industry.

The situation is critical here, with predictions that as many as 75,000 workers will be added to defense-plant payrolls during the year.

In Seattle last week, R. J. Watson, representative of the defense-housing priorities section of the War Production Board, said a stop-order was expected April 1, giving builders 30 days' grace in which to complete nonessential home construction or repairs.

After the 30 days, Watson said, the order would prevent any more building of houses in excess of $6,000 unless offered for sale or rent to defense workers.

Talk Has Adverse Effect

Watson's talk to the clinic of the Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, in which he predicted the severe measures, has had an adverse effect on builders and manufacturers, Blackstock said.

"No order has been issued," Blackstock said, "and it is safe to say that nothing that has been said is authentic until it is confirmed by authoritative sources.

"It is my opinion we will know in proper time of limitations which may be set, and until them it is foolish to indulge in idle rumor. All of us would do well to use that good old horse sense that is tradition in America—don't get excited and don't presume until the man with authority speaks.

"Until Donald Nelson puts his name on the order, don't pay attention to alarms and don't support them.

"All of us want to save every bit of critical material, but there is no rhyme or reason to scare a building contractor any more than it is to alarm a soldier.

"We will keep on building all the buildings we can—but no 'luxury' buildings—and keep on sawing all the wood we can."

Calls Swamp Office

Carl Dumbolten, in charge of building priorities here from the W. P. B., said his office has been swamped with calls from individuals and building concerns since Watson's visit.

Dumbolten said he had sent a telegram to clear up one point raised during Watson's visit.

Watson was quoted as saying a priority rating "probably" would be given to a homeowner who desires to build another residence, move into it, and make his old home available for a defense worker.

Dumbolten said a memorandum December 4 stated priorities assistance should not be granted for such new nondefense housing.

Many Seek Protection

Many persons have called, Dumbolten said, stating they are in the midst of building nondefense homes and asking what they can do to salvage the investment.

"I can't tell them what to do," Dumbolten said, "but they might have it 'frozen' into a unit for sale or rent to a defense worker. Then they would get priorities asistance."

Dumbolten said the public repeatedly asks for definition of a priority rating for home building. He announced such rating is extended only to:

"Such persons to include a member of the armed forces, a person employed in a plant producing war materials, either by direct contract or by sub-contract, or an employe of a branch of the United States government engaged in war activity."

Another requirement for priorities assistance is:

"All housing construction to which priorities assistance is extended must be situated within walking distance (but not, in any event, exceeding two miles) of the war activities it is intended to serve, or with adequate public transportation, already operating or absolutely certain to be placed in operation in time to serve the project, the cost of which shall not exceed 40 cents per round trip on the cheapest available basis and the running time of which shall not exceed two hours per round trip."

Preference Exclusive

Also, said Dumbolten:

"A sign, the wording of which is given on the priority application for preference rating, must be installed in front of each project or individual house which is given a rating, and for a period of 30 days after date of completion exclusive preference must be given to persons engaged in war activities. If, after that time, they (the owners) have not been able to sell or rent to defense workers, they will be able to dispose of the house otherwise."

Unless builders can comply with the regulations, Dumbolten said, they are "wasting their time" applying for priorities assistance at his office or from the F. H. A.
