DEVIN BANS EXTRA WORK IN TAVERNS BY OFFICERS

Van Soelen Rules Steady Duty as Guards is Prohibited by Charter; 46 Affected by Order

Forty-six Seattle policemen must surrender such jobs as being tavern "bouncers" in their hours off duty, Mayor William F. Devin ordered yesterday, immediately after receiving a legal opinion from A. C. Van Soelen, city corporation counsel.

Van Soelen held that city policemen cannot hold steady jobs outside their city police duties.

"The mayor wrote a letter to Police Chief Herbert D. Kimsey, directing him to notify the men involved.

"The mayor has a list, supplied by the chief, of 46 policemen who are working at other jobs in their spare time. The mayor has contended this not only is wrong in principle, but violates the City Charter, which provides that "no member of the police force shall engage in any other profession or calling."

Ban on Liquors During Raids
Devin had asked Van Soelen for an interpretation of the Charter provision, which Van Soelen gave yesterday.

"The mayor also asked if the sale of liquor is prohibited during air raids. Van Soelen said the city's black out ordinance bans liquor sales during blackouts, but there is nothing in the law banning sales in case of daytime air raids. He suggested the State Liquor Control Board should prescribe rules prohibiting sales during raids, and Mayor Devin said he already has asked the Liquor Board to do this.

Only One Case in Point
Van Soelen said he found only one case in law involving a limitation similar to the charter provision affecting the policeman.

This case involved a magistrate of New York City, who sued for salary as treasurer of the New York Giants Baseball Club. The statute provided "no city magistrate shall engage in any other business or profession . . . but . . . shall devote his whole time and capacity so far as the public interest demands to the duties of his office." The New York Court held against the magistrate.

Seattle's corporation counsel said: "If public officers under the Seattle Charter accept employment during off hours which is continuous and cannot be said to be occasional, the same would constitute a violation of the charter provision in question. We conclude that the charter must be so read

JAPANESE INTERNEES START FOR NEW HOME IN IDAHO

The trip evacuated Japanese took from Puyallup to Idaho yesterday was a honeymoon for this couple, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Gomes, who were married Wednesday in the Camp Harmony chapel. "Speaking for publication," said Mr. Gomes with a grin, "our honeymoon will be spent at a widely-publicized desert resort. Very exclusive, too." Gomes' mother is Japanese, his father Portuguese.

Part of the 500 Japanese internees from Camp Harmony are shown as they boarded a special train which left Puyallup yesterday for the Minidoka Relocation Center near Eden, Idaho, which will be their home for the duration. About 500 a day will be moved.

KING, PIERCE CROP LOSSES FEARED FROM LABOR LACK

Three-Week Delay in School Opening Suggested; 1,500 Pickers Needed in Bean Fields; Canneries Short

Labor shortage is so acute in the harvest fields of King and Pierce Counties that farmers may appeal to shipyards to "release" men for emergency harvesting help, the United States Employment Service learned yesterday from Puyallup Valley growers.

An estimated 1,500 pickers are needed this week in the bean fields. Workers also are needed in the packing and processing plants which prepare vegetables for the canners.

The first call for bean pickers came yesterday from Otto S. Johnson, manager of the Employment Service office in Seattle.

Report by T. A. M.
Johnson asked that persons interested in picking report at the northeast corner of Fourth Avenue and James Street at 7 o'clock tomorrow morning. Trucks will provide transportation to and from the job.

"Beans will never be in better condition and must be picked now," Johnson said. "The need for pickers is urgent."

Farmers may appeal for a three-week delay in opening of public schools in the valley area, but district school superintendents generally ask that this not be ordered

SEATTLEITE WINS GRAND PRIZE IN CAMERA CONTEST

Entry of F. C. Barnes Also Takes $15 in Additional Awards; Winners in Four Other Groups Announced

By THE SNAPSHOT CONTEST EDITOR

Winner of the $50 grand prize in the final judging of the 1942 Seattle Times Amateur Snapshot Contest is F. C. Barnes, 5450 36th Ave. S. W., Seattle, a driver for the Seattle Transit System. His entry also won the $10 finals first prize in Class B, and $5 as the best picture entered in the ninth and closing week of the contest.

Other winners of $10 first prizes in the final judging are:
Class A—James R. Stanford, Olympia.
Class C—Don Brastow, 2550 27th Ave. W., Seattle.
Class D—Miss Florence Higgins, Grangeville, Idaho.
Class E—Robert L. Fugal, a coast guardsman at Astoria, Or.

Other winners in the finals are:
Class A—$5 second prize, Miss Wilma Warren, 51427 Cedar St., Spokane; $2.50 third prize, Mrs. R. C. Burr, 3036 West 69th St., Seattle; honorable mention: James R. Stanford, 2509 Columbia, Olympia; George Baer, Bryn Mawr, and Mrs. James Empey, Bellevue.
Class B—Second prize, Mrs. Shirley Foster, 142 N. Lafayette.

Senate Group O. K.'s Soldiers' Vote Bill

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—The Senate privileges and elections committee today approved proposed legislation which would permit men and women serving in the nation's armed forces, stationed in Continental United States, to vote in elections by absentee ballot.

Moving some six blocks by bus to the railroad station was the first stage in their Idaho journey for these Japanese. Hand-luggage and owners were separated, but quickly reunited. Soldiers stumped by jaw-breaker names on removal lists got help from hardy-jawed young Japanese. Note smiling faces attesting to good treatment at the camp; a lesson to Tokyo.

MAYOR OF TOWN IN PIERCE SLAIN

Max Wehr, mayor of Wilkeson, small mining community about 30 miles southeast of Tacoma, was slain about 5:15 yesterday afternoon by an axe-wielding fellow townsman, according to Deputy Sheriff P. H. Panter of Pierce County.

A 35-year-old former miner, now employed at the Seattle-Tacoma shipyards, was arrested a short time later at his home in Wilkeson about a half-block from the scene of the slaying. State Patrolman Paul Johnson made the arrest.

Panter said the fatal assault followed a quarrel between the two men earlier in the afternoon on the main street of Wilkeson. After the dispute Wehr lay down on the plot of grass just off the main street and went to sleep.

"While Wehr was sleeping, his

Japs Backtrack Oregon Trail To Idaho Camp

Reversing the historic trek made by Ezra Meeker over the Oregon Trail, nearly a century ago, 500 Japanese internees headed eastward from Meeker's former home, Puyallup, yesterday, on their way to permanent quarters at the Minidoka (Idaho) Relocation Center.

Both journeys were made against a background of uncertainty and danger. Both tested the courage of a man and his family. And there was room in both for light-heartedness.

At Camp Harmony on the Western Washington Fair Grounds yesterday, light-heartedness predominated among those who were leaving and those who would shortly follow. Nor was it a forced emotion to serve as a mask for bitterness or anger.

"This must be done," they

TWO SEATTLEITES DROWN IN LAKES

Two Seattle men, a painter and a crane operator, lost their lives in drowning accidents yesterday afternoon and evening. They were George Benson, 36-year-old painter, 4922 43rd Ave. S., and Morris Tomlan, 56 years old, 5107 47th Ave. S. W.

Benson was drowned in shallow water at the Seward Park bathing beach about 8:45 o'clock, just 45 minutes after the last guard had left the beach. His body was discovered about 15 minutes later by two boys, Everett Rodgers, 9 years old, 11729 14th Ave. S., and his brother, Douglas, 11.

The boys were wading with a friend, Joseph Lapham, 9, when they made the discovery and called their father, Arthur Rodgers, who brought Benson's body to the surface. A Fire Department inhalator squad worked vainly for

DAUGHTER OF COLONEL SLAYS ARMY CAPTAIN

Officer Fatally Wounded By Girl, 21, Who Charges He Beat Her in Quarrel On Their Trip Into Mexico

DOUGLAS, Ariz., Aug. 15.—(UP)—"Lovers' quarrel" ended tonight in the death of Capt. David Carr, United States Army, from bullet wounds assertedly inflicted by his fiancée, 21-year-old Margaret Herlihy, daughter of a lieutenant colonel at Fort Huachuca.

Captain Carr died at 9:05 p. m. at the General Hospital here, several hours after Army surgeons performed an emergency operation in an attempt to save his life. In a nearby hospital room, police were holding Miss Herlihy, daughter of Lieut. Col. Edward George Herlihy, on charges of assault with a deadly weapon.

Police Chief Percy Bowden refused to say what further charges would be brought against the tall, titian-haired girl, who said she shot Carr because he had beaten and choked her when they quarreled.

Doctors who examined Miss Herlihy said there were many bruises on her body and around her throat. Bowden said he had learned Miss Herlihy had been married and divorced before her engagement to

Jap Plane Parts Littered Dutch Harbor, Says Officer

A Navy must talk to its various units before it can fight, and so Nichols of Seattle took good care of such talking early last June, when the Japs bombed Dutch Harbor on two successive days.

Up there in the grim Aleutian northland, Lieutenant Nichols stuck close to his post while the bombs fell and the strafing machine guns hammered away. He kept his eyes and his hands on a hundred and one details as the lead flew. The United States forces fought, and one of his radiomen fell almost within reach, a bomb fragment in the back of his head.

The tall, thin lieutenant was communications officer at the Aleutian outpost. He kept military conversations flowing nicely throughout those two days.

Military officials are quick to praise the lieutenant and his work during the Dutch Harbor bombing,

JAPS BATTERED IN ALASKA RAID

place. And if there was one Zero plane found in the islands—as there was more than a month after the attack—there must have been others which never made it back to their carrier.

Knew Japs Were Coming
Lying there on his bed atop the counterpane, wearing his uniform, Lieutenant Nichols just had awakened from one of his numerous naps, part of the treatment for his malady. It takes a lot of sleeping to recover from two days like those two days of Dutch Harbor, June 3 and 4, 1942.

"But I don't have any bad dreams now," the lieutenant said. His white teeth gleamed against his dark skin. "I had my nightmare before the attack. I knew they were coming, and we were ready for them. But it wasn't easy to wait for them."

Former service repairman for the Puget Sound Power & Light Company in Seattle, Lieutenant Nichols has been in the Naval Reserve for ten years; he spent the past two years on active duty. As an indication of the United States' preparedness for the Jap attack, he was there more than a half year before the enemy planes came, making communications ready. But now that he's done his part and seen the attack, he's ready to forget it.

Cream colored walls, apple green trimmings and speckled linens in the Navy hospital at Bremerton help Lieutenant Nichols wipe away from his memory the shifting scenes of incredible debris as 500-pound bombs not only smashed trucks, buildings and a "hotel ship," but threw tons of dirt into the air.

Mud Thrown 300 Feet
"The ground up there is very soft—made of volcanic ash, I believe, and therefore very mushy," the lieutenant recalled. "First the bombs, most of them 500-pounders, went right through this ash. They didn't explode until they hit soft rock underneath. Then they tumbled aside not only the rock and bomb fragments, but all this soft earth besides, throwing it all from 200 to 300 feet. That's why the pictures you see show buildings and trucks and everything splattered with this mushy mud."

Although the Dutch Harbor attack was sudden, the officers and men there knew it was coming. There had been tremendous preparations made for an "eventual attack," the lieutenant said.

"Everybody on the station had been up since before daybreak," said the 40-year-old lieutenant, who looks at least 10 years younger. "We all felt we'd have some part in the battle. It was coming great for months in advance, but of course the atmosphere was more tense after December 7. We had a pretty good line on when they were coming. Everybody was on deck before sunrise, both the Army and the Navy."

At the moment of the attack, Lieutenant Nichols just had placed the station's mail aboard a PBV, Navy patrol plane.

"The plane had just started to take off when the Japs came over," said the former communications officer. "I was coming back up the ramp. A Jap plane came in, flying plenty low, and shot that plane pretty full of holes. One of the men, the radioman, was killed. The pilot kept on going across the water to a spot of land, so the plane wouldn't sink, and pulled up on the spit there on the other side of the harbor."

Dive Bombers Second Day
"I went up to the command post. I sure moved. I jumped into my car and went back to the command post. There was a lot of activity. The Japs had a good ceiling, 6,000 or 7,000 feet. First they did level bombing, and the second day they did a lot of dive bombing."

"We had all our stations, ships and posts working for many more weeks. I stayed right in the communications building. Naturally, that was my place."

"I could hear shell fragments flying all around."
"My radioman was caught in the back of the head with a shell fragment. Direct hits tore down our antennae. But they had no chance to get close enough on their dive bombing to really get on their targets. On their flat bombing, the anti-aircraft guns were hitting them continually."

The attitude of all the combat troops, as well as station personnel doing other work than actual fighting, was "casual," said the lieutenant. Even the radioman standing near him, struck by the shell fragment, was "casual," as he was taken to the dispensary for treatment and during the next few days.

"The Northwestern, which was being used for quarters, was burning so that I believe it just about melted," the lieutenant recalled. "I believe they were trying to hit the dock, not the ship. Then the oil tanks were burning, later."

Not a Second Pearl Harbor
"Our boys weren't fooling around. They took things seriously and worked like troopers. A lot of them are still carrying on. They did a darned good job during and after the battle, and both the Army and Navy deserve plenty of credit for what they did up there. It was far from being a second Pearl Harbor, as some people seem to think."

A native of Wisconsin and former University of Wisconsin student, Lieutenant Nichols has lived in Seattle since 1924. His home is at 10032 12th Ave. S. W., where his wife now awaits his return from the hospital. He has worked with electricity and radio for many years, and hopes to go on war radio work for many more years, but so long as he lives he will never forget one Dutch Harbor scene in particular.

"There was a fire watcher on one side of the road, and on the other side there was a truck. The truck was pointing toward the place where a bomb hit. The earth broke up into a million pieces. The truck driver was blown right through the windshield. The radiator, and the hood were blown right off the front of the truck, over the top of it, and landed behind the machine."

"The Japs missed something terrible. They planted shots all around, but didn't hit anything in particular. We managed to get our repair work done in short order, so we got a little rest between raids, but we did eat right there on the station."

NORWEGIANS HELP COMMANDO FILM

Six Norwegian soldiers who escaped their homeland after battling the Nazi invaders have been sent by the government to Victoria, B. C., as technical advisers and actors in the motion picture, "The Commandos Come at Dawn," being filmed on Vancouver Island. In the photograph they are seen in the left background, four of them wearing overseas caps, one an officer's cap and one bareheaded. The man in left foreground wearing jacket and soft white hat is Ern Westmore, Hollywood make-up artist. Sound Man Bill Hamilton (stripped to waist) is holding a microphone resembling a hornet's nest which will be swung on pole over actors' heads as action begins.

Even there in the hospital, amid the good, safe sounds of tinkling water glasses, light banter by the nurses, and soft footsteps, there are two sensations Lieutenant Nichols still can feel. One is the suspense in your heart when a dive bomber comes toward you. The other is the relief you feel when it's apparent that the enemy has not you, but another target, "in mind" at the moment.

G. O. P. Leaders Want Campaign To Be 'Clean'

Frederick E. "You should not make unwarranted attacks on other Republican candidates, but you should endeavor to present a constructive program to the people so that the voters may judge fairly who in their opinion is best qualified to represent them," the statement said. "If you are not successful in obtaining the Republican nomination, seemed to say, "When it is over, we will come back."

"So, what had to be done was done cheerfully, and when there was fun to be had, they reached for it."

There was laughing and smiling among the families as they boarded the big double-decked busses which were to carry them to the railroad depot half a dozen blocks away.

They came in single file, some in officers' uniforms, some in lettered sweaters, some in slacks. They came bustling and haltingly, some gay, some sober.

They came carrying umbrellas, battered field hats, paper bags and string bags, cookie tins, metal buckets, pillows. Here was a doll clutched to a 9-year-old breast, there a box of chocolate bars, vander a wine jug filled with water.

Soldiers Boss Job
Soldiers—who handled the transfer with the smoothness of oiled machinery—perused over lists of names, aided by a young Japanese who hustled his countrymen along with shouts and grins.

In the air was subdued clamor of voices—a portion of it in the clipped tongue of the Nipponese but more of it in English.

From the bus windows emanated "Fls of Good-bye, Good-bye," "Fls of Good-bye, Good-bye," and "I'll be meeting you guys."

Hand luggage was being passed into an accompanying truck by a "bucket brigade" of teen-age boys who had developed a spine-chilling technique on other projects about the city.

That baggage flew, and wisecracks flew along with it. "Swell coolie system we have dooped out here," one boy quipped. "His neighbor took a more personal view. 'Hey, you bunch of rats, how about somebody besides me doing some work?'"

On came the line filing toward the busses—youth men and old, doctors and field laborers, faces smooth and wrinkled, children alarmed at the shuffling trucks and busses, mothers watchful and anxious.

No families were divided. Authorities were careful of that. In the middle of the line were Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Gomes. They had been married Wednesday in the Camp Harmony chapel. "Our honeymoon," said Gomes, smiling at his bride, "will be spent at a widely publicized desert resort. Very exclusive, too."

The biggest family making the trip in this contingent was that of Frank Uyebara, numbered 11, Ishi, the grandmother, was 76 years old. Sue, the mother, was 39. James, 19. Howard, 13; Mary, 17; Agnes, 15. George, 13; Thomas, 10; Loretta, 6; and little Yaeko, 2. The Uyebaras formerly resided at 518 16th Ave.

Mrs. Ko Takashi, mother of eight, said softly, "It isn't so bad to go for a 'week' while, but we want to come back."
On board the train, families fell at once to chatting, reading or playing games. Train trips didn't happen often, and the most must be made of this one.

One youngster had discovered the luncheon menu and was gravely spelling out the day's fare—choice of halibut, meat loaf or roast pork, vegetables, lettuce salad and ice cream or jello with a choice of drinks. He was smacking his lips.

Transfer of the 7,200 interned Japanese will continue at the rate of 500 a day until August 22. After a delay to assure the preparation of adequate accommodations, the transfer will proceed from August 29 until the entire population has been shifted from the Coast, according to Col. Karl R. DeWitt, assistant chief of staff, civil affairs division, Western Defense Command.

Legion's Chief O. K.'s Fund For Russian Relief

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 15.—(UP)—National Commander Lynn U. Stambaugh of the American Legion today endorsed Indianapolis' united war fund, despite the protests of Homer Chaillaux, the Legion's Americanist director, who recently denounced the drive because it included Russian war relief.

Frank Samuel, national adjutant of the Legion, also approved the drive in a letter to local officials. Stambaugh, here for the annual convention of the Legion's Indiana Department, said Samuel's letter "speaks for me."

Their approval followed a wave of protest to Chaillaux' statement, which charged that Russian relief and demands for a second front were "communist inspired."

Wendell L. Willkie and Wayne Coy, special assistant to the President, both have approved of the fund, and particularly of Russian relief. Among others who sent protests to Chaillaux' statement were Paul W. McNutt, manpower director, Alfred E. Smith and Charles P. Taft.

Ban on All But $2 Bills Quiets Life in Tijuana

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Aug. 15.—(UP)—Silence reigned in the almost-deserted streets of Tijuana, Mexico, today. Cafes and bars, once thronged with American tourists, were empty as customs officers began enforcing a United States Treasury decree that $2 bills would be the only currency allowed to cross the line.

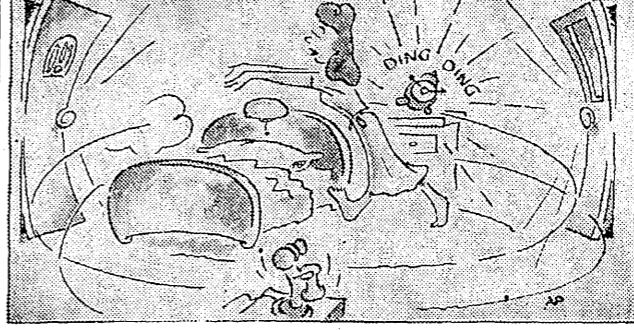

Tijuana bankers and business men rushed plans for establishing money-changing facilities. Walter C. Marty, general manager of the Agua Caliente race track, announced that arrangements have been made to have 50,000 two-dollar bills at the border exchange booth tomorrow.

"We have laid in a plentiful supply of silver dollars and $2 bills," Marty said, and added that anyone who so desires would be issued checks for the amount of his winnings.

Strolling Around the Town

The husband awoke early and went out to water the lawn and flower beds. Presently, the alarm clock began ringing, and his wife (who never shuts off the alarm) sleepily went through these didoes:

1. She answered the telephone. The line was dead.
2. She went to the front door. Nobody there.
3. She went to the back door. Still nobody.

"Back in the bedroom, sleepily muttering about practical jokes, she finally realized there was only one thing left that could ring—the alarm clock. She shut it off and went back to sleep."

Wife, Mistaken For Prowler, Is Slain

SAN DIEGO, Aug. 15.—Bert Monrow Adkinson, 21 years old, an aircraft worker, today admitted to police that he shot and killed his beautiful 21-year-old wife, Doris, thinking she was a prowler. Adkinson, recorded by U. P. in New Dieckman, head of the police homicide squad, that he had gone to a union meeting last night, and afterward had toured several bars with other workers. During the tour he said he had gotten into a dispute with another man, and had left to go home.

When he arrived home, he told Dieckman, his wife met him and helped him into bed, because he admittedly was drunk. "During the night," Dieckman quoted him as saying, "I heard a window rattling and thought it was the fellow I had been arguing with trying to break in. I saw a silhouette against the window and started shooting."
