

Family Lives in Jap School

Special to The Times.

VANCOUVER, B. C., July 15.—Childish voices are echoing again in a former Jap school in Vancouver's Japtown. They're voices of white youngsters, however, and the children aren't bent over school desks. They're living there. Due to the housing shortage, a family with nine children, ranging in age from 1 year to 16, have taken up their residence in the former school.