Moreover, it appears that they have accomplished their purpose for which they went to the North, although it is not stated what discoveries they have made in their search for the supposed continent in the Beaufort Sea.

Their information is contained in a dispatch from Fort Yukon, which says: Prof. Stefanssen of Mikkelson's party hailed the steamer Koyukuk at Fort Yukon on September 3.

Prof. Stefanssen said he was carrying dispatches. He reported that the Mikkelson party made the trip north over the ice and were encamped many hardships during the trip.

Prof. Stefanssen made the almost impossible trip from Herschel Island up the Mackenzie River and down the Beaufort Sea.

The schooner Duchess of Bedford left Victoria May 20, 1906. The vessel was of sixty-six tons capacity and the expedition consisted of a scientific research in the Arctic was in charge of Captain Mikkelson.

The project was actually supported by the Royal Geographical Society of London and other scientific associations.

Others taking part in the expedition were Ernest de K. Leflingwell, of Chicago University; Dr. Eljnar Dittmer, a biologist; Dr. George F. Howe, physician, zoologist and botanist.
