Berlin Preliminary Work in Ceramics

With the recent arrival from Alfred, New York, of Daniel Rhodes, ceramic designer and technologist at the New York State college of ceramics, preliminary work in the clay products shop has begun. The clay products shop is one of several activities outlined in the training for industry program headed by William M. Friedman, architect and designer and former chairman of the faculty at the Laboratory school of industrial design, New York.

A general meeting for those interested will take place on Tuesday, Sept. 29, in laundry room #29, block 29, at 7:30 p.m. At this time an outline of the program and an explanation of the nature of the training will be given by Rhodes. In addition, a few of his works in ceramics as well as sample clays found in this region will be exhibited.

Preliminary studies of the soil have determined the availability as well as the adaptability of local clays for the production of various ceramic wares. It is hoped that these will ultimately meet the needs of the mess-halls, hospital, households, and even of offices. In time, perhaps, industrial cooperatives for the production of these wares for the use of other centers, for uses by the Army, and for outside markets wherein no competition exists, may be realized.

With a select few who have had previous training to form the nucleus, the construction of necessary equipment is at present under way in the Administrative garage which is serving temporarily as the work shop until the regular shops are ready. Because of the limitations both of space and of equipment, participation in the actual making of pottery on a large scale will necessarily have to be delayed. Present plans are to devote the initial part of the program to lectures and demonstrations.

Colonists are asked not to take more coal than necessary from the mess halls as transportation facilities do not permit a large quantity to be brought at once.

"Continuation of taking lumber deposited for the purpose of celotex installation must be stopped," said acting chief Rosie Hatcui of the police department.
