SHINJO NAGATOMI

Reference is made to your request for a name check on Shinjo Nagatomi, individual No. 26906-A. Both the individual record form and the files of this Bureau reflect that Nagatomi was a Buddhist priest. The Buddhist religion as opposed to Shintoism is a true religion containing many of the precepts of Christianity. The Japanese version, however, differs from classical Buddhism in that many principles of Shintoism have been incorporated causing it to be one of the ways by which Japanese nationalism can be brought to the people. It has been learned that a number of Buddhist priests in the United States hold or have held commissions in the Japanese army, and one of them was known to act as an observer of the United States fleet for a Japanese Consul. The majority of these priests are also principals of Japanese language schools, and in this dual capacity have been in the best position of all Japanese in the United States to spread Japanese propaganda among the people of that race residing in this country.
