

Canadian Nisei Aid War Effort In Relocation

Evacuees Grow Beets, Cut Fuel Wood in British Columbia Interior

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Canada's 24,000 persons of Japanese ancestry who once lived in Vancouver and in towns and farms along the coastal regions of British Columbia are now hundreds of miles away—but they are doing their part in the dominion's war effort.

In the year since the evacuation of Japanese and Japanese Canadians from the "protected area" along the British Columbia coast, an evacuation program which closely followed that of persons of Japanese ancestry from the west coast of the United States, most of the Canadian evacuees have settled in "interior housing projects" in eastern British Columbia. Other evacuees, many of whom left voluntarily before the actual evacuation, have gone into the Canadian prairie provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Other Japanese Canadians have already been located in Ontario and as far east as Montreal.

A dispatch to the Christian Science Monitor reports that hundreds of evacuee families in Alberta have been working in the beet sugar fields and are partly responsible for heavy crops to be harvested there this year to relieve the wartime sugar shortage.

Under a program already initiated, hundreds of the Japanese evacuees will work in the woods of the Slocan-Kaslo, Bridge River and other areas and produce cordwood for Vancouver, New Westminster and other centers which might otherwise be faced with a critical fuel shortage during the coming winter.

In addition, evacuees in the Caribou district are now cutting jack pine for a pulp mill and will send part of their output in the form of cordwood for fuel.

Some 200 Japanese Canadians are now employed in commercial logging and sawmill enterprises. It was hoped some months ago that 3000 would be engaged, thus releasing an equivalent number of white loggers for coastal forests where the Japanese cannot now be employed.

A report by Tom Shoyama, editor of the New Canadian, an evacuee newspaper published at Kaslo, B. C., declares that in Montreal some Japanese Canadians are now employed in work they would never had a chance to do on the west coast. A representative group of these nisei Canadians are working in a public utility firm, a financial newspaper, a furniture factory, shipyards, a flour mill, in radio work and publishing. Three are employed by RCA Victor in Montreal although the majority of those relocating in eastern Canadian cities are working as domestics and in personal service work in restaurants and institutions.

Americans of All Races Join In Tending Japanese Cemetery

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Fremont cemetery, home for many of Portland's deceased Japanese, will today, August 14, be beautified by other Americans from those who tended it these many years and are now restricted from this area.

On this day Negroes and whites, Jews, Catholics, Protestants and Americans of Chinese descent will give the afternoon toward reconditioning and beautifying the grounds. The grass will be cut, shabby trimmed, weeds pulled and grass clipped around the tombstones.

The work will be done under the direction of the Portland Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Story of the Week Nisei Girl Arrested on Return to Evacuated Area

SEATTLE — An American woman of Japanese ancestry who returned to Seattle without permission so she could be with her Chinese American husband was ordered held for military authorities this week by U. S. Commissioner Harry M. Westfall, following her arrest by FBI agents.

She is Mrs. Kiyoko Chinn, wife of Chin S. Lin, a sheet metal worker at Associated Shipyards, who is also known as Harry Chinn.

In a complaint filed in federal court Saturday, Mrs. Chinn was specifically charged with violation of the military order evacuating and excluding persons of Japanese ancestry from the West coast.

Mrs. Chinn, an American-born Japanese, left the Tule Lake relocation center in California last November to work in sugar beet fields around Caldwell, Idaho. She remained in Idaho a month, then went to Spokane, Wash., and worked as a domestic until the second week of May when she came to Seattle.

Since her return to Seattle Mrs. Chinn has been living with her husband at 607 Seneca St. and working as a power machine operator for the Seattle Quilt Manufacturing company.

After going to Spokane she applied to the Western Defense Command at San Francisco for permission to return to Seattle so she could be with her husband, but she was denied permission, according to Howard B. Fletcher, special agent in charge of the Seattle FBI office.

"I only hope that there'll be some solution for this situation that will allow me to be with my husband," she said in court.

The fact that she is of Japanese ancestry has never made any difference with her husband or his friends, Mrs. Chinn said. The attack on Pearl Harbor by Japan was described by her as a terrible nightmare.

"I want to see America win this war," she said, "because I'm an American and I believe that we are fighting for the right thing."

Mrs. Chinn was born in Seattle on April 30, 1919. Her name before marriage was Kiyoko Horikawa. Her parents died before her marriage to Chinn, she said.

Mrs. Chinn's bail was set at $5,000. Commissioner Westfall declared that she would have to stay in jail, pending decision of military authorities on her case.

"I guess it was like this," she explained softly. "I just wanted to see my husband and my home again."

"I got on the train and came to Seattle," she said simply, declaring that she had been in Seattle since May, and that all the time "everyone was nice to me."

She said she "supposed people knew I was of Japanese ancestry," adding that she had put in her application for a job as a power-machine operator, that she was "Japanese married to a Chinese."

"It's all my fault," she said. "I wanted to come home and so I came."

Women's Army Corps Begins Recruiting Japanese American Girls Under New U. S. Policy

Weight, Height Qualifications Modified For Nisei Women; Recruits Limited to 500 But Will Not Be Placed in Segregated Units

American Legion Sponsors 'No Jap' Signs in Porterville

PORTERVILLE, Calif.—Sign boards reading "No Japs Wanted in Porterville" will be posted at the north and south entrances to the town by the American Legion post here, the United Press reports.

There were many farms operated by persons of Japanese ancestry in the Porterville area before evacuation.

Capt. Mary Louise House, recruiting officer with the Salt Lake City office of the WACs, announced this week that Japanese American girls are now being accepted into the WACs. This regulation became effective Monday, Aug. 9, Capt. House said.

Qualifications for acceptance into the WACs for Japanese Americans are the same as for other American women except for requirements in height and weight, which have been lowered to a minimum height of 57 inches and minimum weight of 95 lbs. Age limits are 20 years to 50 years.

Capt. House said the first quota for Japanese American WACs has been set at 500 for the entire United States, and that the Japanese Americans will not form any special units.

Further information, Capt. House added, may be obtained by writing or phoning (Phone 4-9115): Army Recruiting office, WAC Section, 179 Motor Ave., Salt Lake City, Utah. The Salt Lake office is headquarters for Utah, Idaho and Nevada.

Governor Snell Visits Tule Lake

NEWELL, Calif.—Governor Earl Snell of Oregon and State Senator Marshall Cornett were visitors to the Tule Lake relocation center last week.

They expressed an interest in the cooperative enterprises and the hospital and also inspected some of the living quarters of the evacuees.

Myer Reports 90 Percent of Evacuees Spurn Japanese Request for Repatriation

Great Majority of Individuals Approved For Exchange by Tokyo Government Refuse to Go To Japan; WRA Chief Speaks in San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO — Dillon S. Myer, director of the War Relocation Authority, disclosed on August 5 that a careful check of the ten evacuee war relocation centers in this country showed that only about ten percent of the persons whose repatriation has been requested by the Japanese Government wanted to return to Japan, according to a dispatch from a New York Times correspondent in San Francisco.

Case for Nisei Presented at CIO Conference

Special Meeting On Races Hears Discussion On Japanese Americans

SAN FRANCISCO — The case for loyal Japanese Americans was presented to the conference on racial and national unity in wartime sponsored in San Francisco Monday by the CIO council on minorities, by R. Collins, representing the Alameda CIO Council and local 304 of International Association of Machinists.

Problems faced by loyal Japanese Americans was one of the many considered by the conference which included discussions on discrimination against Negroes and anti-Semitism.

Three major objectives outlined at the conference, held under the auspices of the California CIO council, were:

1. To build stronger unity within the unions and on the job between workers of all races and nationalities.
2. To promote community-wide activity for cooperation of all racial and national groups.
3. To achieve cooperation in the field of political and legislative action.

Delegates from AFL unions, civic, church and fraternal organizations attended the CIO-sponsored meeting.

CIO Director Harry Bridges urged immediate action to combat the campaign to "pit race against race and create confusion on the home front."

Paul Robeson, noted singer, warned against fascism at home and called for racial unity in America.

California State Bar to Assist Evacuees in Obtaining Legal Aid

Favorable Response Reported as Attorneys Consider Situation

By SABURO KIDO

One of the problems confronting the evacuee residents of the relocation centers has been the matter of retaining attorneys to represent them in legal matters, concerning their personal or property affairs. In order to facilitate matters, the War Relocation Authority obtained the cooperation of the American Bar Association and approached the State Bar of California for assistance. The result was that a favorable response was announced, enabling those who desired to render legal services to do so without any complications of legal ethics.

Six principal questions were studied and answered by the State Bar of California for the member attorneys to clarify the situation. They were:

1. Are these evacuees entitled to representation by an attorney in the California courts?
2. Is their wartime status such that they are not permitted the

In anticipation of another sailing of the exchange ship Gripsholm, which he hoped would be within "sixty days," Japan has furnished the State Department with a list of persons whom it wished sent back to that country, Mr. Myer said.

"The Gripsholm has been held up," he went on, "because the Japanese Government has insisted on some going back who don't want to go."

A considerable percentage of the 6,500 who have asked for repatriation in the war relocation centers were influenced, according to Mr. Myer, by the belief that "there will be no place for them in this country after the war."

Mr. Myer, whose policy of releasing residents of relocation centers into private life in non-military zones has been criticized by some groups in and out of Congress, replied to his critics at a luncheon sponsored by the Committee on American Principles and Fair Play, of which President Robert Gordon Sproul of the University of California is honorary chairman.

"I have been a little bit amazed at the inconsistency of some folks who live in your state," Mr. Myer told his hearers. "They take the position they don't want the evacuated Japanese back in California, yet they are trying to block our program to settle them somewhere else."

Myer disclosed that the program to segregate "pro-Japan" groups in the relocation centers will get under way about September 10, when trains will begin moving "pro-Americans" out of the Tule Lake center in northern California to other centers and take "pro-Japanese" into Tule Lake where it is intended to keep 15,000 to 18,000 of them for the duration. This movement, Mr. Myer said, should be completed around November 1.

usual access to the legal machinery of California?

3. If so, could an equitable referral system be established which would help to meet the situation?

4. What ethical issues are involved in the solution of the problem?

5. What is the attitude of the State Bar regarding the fee schedule of the War Relocation Authority?

6. Does the project contribute to the winning of the war?

Under the American system, it was agreed that even an alien enemy, or one of alien extraction, is entitled to have his personal and property rights determined under the laws applicable thereto. And an important part of that protection is the right to counsel. The German saboteurs were given a trial in harmony with the American conception of due process of law. Traditionally, it has never been regarded as dishonorable on the part of a lawyer to secure or protect the legal rights of any person, alien, criminal or otherwise, within the boundaries of this country. At the same time

Relocation Director Reveals Japanese American Aid in Isolating Disloyal Elements

Myer Answers Editorial Challenge During Visit To Seattle Region

SEATTLE—Dillon S. Myer, National WRA director, told the Seattle Times Monday that there have been "hundreds of occasions" on which loyal Japanese Americans have assisted authorities in isolating disloyal elements within the relocation centers.

The Times had stated in an editorial on August 6 that the WRA director should be asked the question: "How many instances have there been of any of these 'loyal' Japanese Americans reporting acts or suspicions of loyalty among their fellow countrymen?"

The Times had noted that the "charge had been made by a national speaker of more than passing prominence."

"That charge has never been effectively challenged," the Times had declared.

Myer stressed, however, that loyal Japanese Americans were cooperating with the authorities.

Visiting Seattle this week on his tour of the west coast in connection with the handling of evacuee-owned real estate and property, Myer declared that an increased granting of "indefinite" and "seasonal" leaves to loyal residents of the relocation centers would follow the segregation of evacuees of questionable loyalty at the Tule Lake, Calif., center.

Questioned as to the WRA's attitude regarding the return of evacuees to the west coast, Myer pointed out that only the War department can decide whether or not the evacuees should be allowed to return to the coastal area.

Myer also declared that, although an effort would be made to relocate evacuees in normal civilian life, none of the residents of the centers would be forced to leave.

He also said that there had been no great agitation for the removal of persons of Japanese ancestry from the Hawaiian islands and very little for the program of deporting all persons of Japanese ancestry after the war.

"And I hope that as the war shapes up in the Pacific, there will be none," he added. "We don't want something akin to the Indian reservations to develop out of this thing. To talk categorically of moving any race group out of the country, it seems to me, is defeating the things we are fighting for. Remember that there are already some 9,000 Japanese American boys in our army."

NEW SEATTLE TEMPLE TO SERVE IN WAR

SEATTLE, Wash. — In a new Buddhist Temple at 1427 Main street, which was nearing completion when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, young Americans are receiving their final training for positions aboard American ships in war service, the Seattle Times reported last week.

The building, of Oriental architecture, has been leased by the United States Maritime Service for use as a graduate station for men entering the American Merchant Marine.

Last week, according to the Times report, 60 young men, who are graduates of Maritime Service training stations at Catalina Island, Calif., Sheep's Head Bay, N. Y., and St. Petersburg, Fla., were quartered at this graduate station, receiving the finishing touches in a training that will prepare them for berths aboard ships carrying men and supplies to the war zones.

When this station is completed, recreation and entertainment will be provided. A library, reading and writing room and a canteen will be part of the station.

There are 100 bunks in the main dormitory, a mess hall, a galley presided over by four Chinese cooks, a store room and offices and quarters for officers. The station has facilities for 120 men.

The staff at the station also includes two storekeepers, three yeomen, a boatswain's mate second

DENSON FAMILY SENDS THIRD SON INTO U. S. ARMY

DENSON, Ark.—Mrs. Masakichi Takahashi of the Jerome relocation center can now hang a three star service flag in the window of her home, says the Denson Tribune, for her third son, George, has now joined the combat team at Camp Shelby. Mrs. Takahashi has two other sons in the army, Sergeant Joe Takahashi at Camp Shelby and Sergeant Tater Takahashi at Camp Robinson, Ark.

California State Bar to Assist Evacuee Group

(Continued from page 1). It has always been the right of any attorney to decline any offered employment, whenever distasteful or unacceptable, either because of the employment or because of other considerations.

The State Bar was of the opinion that the bulk of evacuees — small business men, little farmers, and workers — do not have attorneys like these with large property holdings. They are unable to go about protecting their legal affairs by reason of language difficulties, education or residence.

As far as the employment of the attorneys was concerned, a plan for rotation of names on the list was to be arranged so that over a period of time each attorney listed has an equal opportunity. On the other hand, each evacuee using the service has a chance to make a selection from among the names presented him.

The ethical problem of solicitation of business was waived because the request for cooperation had come from the American Bar Association itself. The Los Angeles Bar Association for a number of years has had such a system.

Another question was the confidential relationship of lawyer and client. According to the arrangement to be made, in case the government is party to the action, directly or indirectly, the attorney is not required to furnish duplicates of his correspondence. In non-governmental actions, the client consents beforehand that the documents shall be furnished to the WRA in order that the WRA may be kept informed about his case.

The fees set by the WRA seems to have created some comment as being too low. But the position of the State Bar was that the attorneys on the list did not have to accept employment and therefore it was optional to them. In the same manner, the evacuee will be free to select his own counsel or to re-employ counsel with whom he has had former associations.

As to whether the project is going to contribute to the winning of the war, the State Bar gave two answers:

(a) If the preservation of the American system of justice, even for those with whom we are now at war, is an important objective of the conflict this project would provide evidence of the good will, at least of the legal profession, to make American justice function in ultimate, critical instances.

(b) In a more practical, hard headed manner, the project may have direct results in that it will help more speedily to release farms, tools, machinery, apartments, homes, shops, and property for the use of Californians, in meeting the contingencies of the war. There are hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property involved which should and can be used in the war effort. The unraveling of legal difficulties speedily and justly will therefore be a direct aid to the war effort which the attorneys of California can give.

class, a coxswain and two seamen, first class.

The station will serve as a reservoir of graduate seafaring men and will supply crews for ships coming from the yards in the Puget Sound area.

UC Newspaper Asks Students Aid Coast Fair Play Group

Would Combat Campaign Against Loyal Citizens Of Japanese Ancestry

BERKELEY, Calif. — The Daily Californian, news publication of the Associated Student Body of the University of California, has asked campus students to aid in combatting "virulent propaganda against the Japanese in the United States" by joining the Pacific Coast committee on American Principles and Fair Play.

The plea was made in an editorial published in that newspaper on July 28.

The principles of the Fair Play committee as set forth by the Daily Californian ask for:

1. Segregation of all disloyal persons of Japanese ancestry.

2. The protection of the right of loyal Americans of Japanese ancestry to serve in the armed forces of the United States.

3. The opportunity for loyal Americans of Japanese ancestry to resettle in the manner which, in the judgment of the federal government, is the best designed to meet the manpower shortage.

4. Fair play for Americans of Japanese ancestry who are loyal.

The president of the university, Robert Gordon Sproul, declared the editorial, is honorary chairman of the organization.

The University of California, up to evacuation, had several hundred Nisei enrolled for courses each year at both the Berkeley and Los Angeles schools.

Segregation Process Gets Under Way in Relocation Centers

The segregation process instituted by the War Relocation Authority got under way last week as the first of a series of hearings were conducted by segregation boards of review in many of the WRA centers.

The first of a series of hearings were conducted last Saturday in all three of the Poston camps. It was reported that those to be interviewed would include persons giving non-affirmative answers on the loyalty question during the recent registration and those who declined to answer the query.

The members of the segregation boards will make recommendations to the project directors who will decide on the persons to be segregated at Tule Lake.

Poston to Send 1100 To Tule Lake From October First

POSTON, Ariz.—Approximately 1100 Poston residents are scheduled to leave for the segregation camp at Tule Lake starting October 1, according to the Press Chronicle.

The announcement was made by Project Director Wade Head, who reiterated that no stigma of any kind will be attached to persons leaving for the camp.

He also denied the rumor that Poston center will be closed.

Segregation hearings were to have started August 7.

Enemy Alien Hearings "Clear" 40 Percent of Interned Japanese

LOS ANGELES, Calif. — The Los Angeles Times reported here that government figures show that 5234 Japanese nationals were taken into custody and interned since December 7, 1941.

Of this figure, it is reported that 2079 have been ordered interned for the duration, following individual hearings before enemy alien hearing boards.

From incomplete figures, it was reported that at present 40 percent of those interned were "cleared" after their hearings. Some have been paroled to citizens and returned to their homes, while others have been sent to WRA centers. Approximately 1300 were "paroled" and sent to the WRA camps, it was reported.

Set Departure Date for Move To Tule Lake

Estimated 1250 Will Leave Heart Mountain For Segregation Camp

HEART MOUNTAIN, Wyo. — An estimated 1250 evacuees at the Heart Mountain relocation center will be sent to the Tule Lake permanent relocation center in California about the middle of September, it was reported here Tuesday.

At the same time, some 2000 loyal Japanese Americans and resident aliens will be moved from Tule Lake to Heart Mountain and gradually restored to civilian life.

According to tentative plans disclosed here, the first trainload of 500 evacuees from Tule Lake will arrive September 13 and the first contingent of 450 will leave Heart Mountain the following day.

Californian Seeks To Break Lease

WODLAND, Calif. — Leonard Buck, executor of the estate of the late Congressman Frank H. Buck, filed a suit in Superior Court Saturday against Roy and Ben Hatanaka, now in a relocation center, to collect back rent and receive the right to break a contract on farm land in Capay valley, near Rumsey.

TIMELY TOPICS

By SABURO KIDO

Assimilation Question Raised

The question of assimilation is being raised once again against the Japanese in this country. Our contention has been that cultural assimilation is taking place through the educational system. As far as biological assimilation was concerned, it seemed to be ridiculous because barriers were being set up to prevent such a thing from taking place.

Evacuation revealed the surprising fact that many intermarriages had taken place. It is a matter of conjecture whether if public acceptance had been favorable, a greater number might have married other races. Statistics on the New York Japanese residents seem to bear out this fact. About 51 per cent of the Issei men are married to Caucasian wives.

As the WRA program of dispersal is carried out, more and more will be moving into new areas. During my recent travels to the Middle West and the East, I heard of many instances of Nisei soldiers and evacuees marrying those of other races.

In this connection, it may be interesting to look into the laws of some of the states. The following prohibit intermarriages: Arizona, California, Georgia, Idaho, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming. Some of the laws mentioned "Japanese" whereas the large majority mention "Mongolian" which include the Japanese. There may be other states which have statutes prohibiting the intermarriage of the Japanese with Caucasians.

A Supreme Court decision declares that such prohibitions are valid on the grounds of public policy. But this was handed down when the negroes had just emerged from slavery. If a new test case should be brought up at this time, it should be interesting to see what the justices decide. Many cases which have been considered as precedents have been reversed by the Supreme Court in recent years. It would not be surprising to find the old decision reversed.

If the United States, as a nation, is going to be really unified, and live up to the ideals of equality, such laws as those prohibiting intermarriages should be declared unconstitutional.

A large number from the relocation centers are working in various farms throughout Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and Nebraska. Many of them are out on temporary work furloughs, which means that they expect to return after their contracts have expired. As to their plans for next year, it seems that a large number are scouting around to study the possibilities of farming. Conditions are different from those prevailing in the Pacific Coast region. If favorable a large number expect to return next season and go on their own as share croppers or lease out-right.

The new farmers who have moved into the intermountain area will be feeding the people with local products. Already the situation is being reversed. Old timers say that it is the first time within their memory that many California commission merchants have come to Utah to buy crops to be sent into the Los Angeles market. Two things have a great deal to do with this situation: The evacuation of the skilled Japanese farmers and the large influx of defense workers and soldiers to California.

Last year the Japanese farmers worked until the time of evacuation. One reason was the threat of having a charge of sabotage brought against them if they did not carry out their farming and the other was their patriotic duty to fulfill their responsibilities by growing whatever they could. Consequently, the crops were windfalls to many Caucasians. What they had to do was to simply harvest the crop. Not all of them made money, but the cultivation angle was not difficult.

The California farmers will have to raise crops by starting with the planting from now on. Whether there are sufficient number with experience is the big question. When growers of 192,000 acres leave, there is bound to be a shortage, for truck farming is one thing that machinery cannot do.

As far as large scale farming is concerned, Utah does not seem to be the ideal place. Idaho, Colorado and other areas seem to have the available land as well as water. The prospects of these states becoming competitors of California are promising. The only dark cloud is the public reaction if too many Japanese farmers should go in to start large projects.

Many of the Nisei place emphasis on defense jobs. But there are others who believe that farming is the salvation for resettlement. With this idea in view, more and more are beginning to look towards the Middle West because this region is closer to the large markets. The day may come yet when the exiled Japanese farmers may find places to grow products to ship to the eastern markets and thereby compete with the growers who wanted them chased out of California.

Wisconsin Dentists Frown on Employment of Nisei Evacuees

Executive Council Of State Dental Society Will Issue Statement

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—Employment of Japanese American dentists, dental laboratory technicians and hygienists under the War Relocation Authority program is frowned upon by the executive council of the Wisconsin State Dental society in a statement which will appear in the September-October issue of the Journal, the society's publication, the Milwaukee Journal, leading Wisconsin daily newspaper, reported on August 3.

The newspaper reported that in the dental publication, which will reach the membership around September 5, according to Kenneth F. Crane, executive secretary, the executive council will say:

"We believe it would be detrimental to our war efforts and to the welfare of our patients to relocate Japanese Americans of any type in our highly industrialized state.

"We believe that Japanese dentists are not needed to fill any shortage of manpower in Wisconsin; that there is no specific need of Japanese American dental assistants or hygienists, unless requested by an individual. His right to hire is his own responsibility, if the person he wishes to hire can meet the necessary state license requirements.

"The dental profession cannot place its stamp of approval upon the hiring of Japanese American laboratory technicians.

"In all of the above cases we are considering the present war effort, the welfare of our patients and most of all, the prevention of unfavorable postwar conditions. When our technicians now in service return, we must consider their welfare and the need for more relocation after peace has been declared."

The society's governing body took its position at a meeting July 11 at Greening Lake. Joseph H. Hansen of the Milwaukee office of the War Relocation Authority was at the meeting and outlined the relocation program.

Hansen said that the WRA wanted to get the position of the society because it had received a number of requests from those in the dental profession wishing to hire Japanese Americans. According to the Milwaukee Journal, Hansen said the WRA had adopted a policy of not trying to place Japanese Americans where such action would excite feeling against them.

Eyvind E. Ketchpaw, head of the WRA office in Milwaukee, confirmed Hansen's statement of policy but added that his office would fill individual requests for Japanese Americans in the dental field as they are received. He said one Japanese American is now employed as a dental laboratory technician and has satisfied his employer by his work.

"There is a shortage of dentists, laboratory technicians and dental hygienists here," Ketchpaw said. "We know that from reading the advertisements. It is foolish to think that the Japanese Americans will be competition after the war. Japanese Americans cannot—any more than other workers—replace those who are in the service."

Crane said that the society's executive council "thought everything out calmly and carefully" before arriving at its decision. He emphasized that individual members would not be subject to disciplinary action if they hired Japanese Americans.

Dr. Robert P. Phelan, president of the Milwaukee County Dental society, said that the question would come up at the next meeting of the county society, probably the third Wednesday in October.

Vandals Pillage Evacuee Goods At L. A. Temple

RIVERS, Ariz.—The evacuee property officer at the Gila River center was recently notified that the Nichiren Buddhist temple, 2800 East Third street, Los Angeles, has been broken in and that evacuee property stored there has been pillaged and scattered.

An Editorial: Journal Raps Attitude of Dental Group

The following editorial, "Dentists Favor Prejudice," is from the Milwaukee Journal, leading Wisconsin newspaper:

The Wisconsin State Dental Society's executive council has lined itself up squarely in favor of race prejudice. It doesn't want Americans of Japanese ancestry to work as dental laboratory technicians or hygienists in Wisconsin.

"The dental profession cannot place its stamp of approval upon the hiring of Japanese American laboratory technicians" — such is the statement of the society's executive council.

It doesn't matter how skilled the Americans of Japanese ancestry happen to be or that they must meet the professional standards set by and for the white dentists and assistants. The executive council says that "it would be detrimental to our war efforts and to the welfare of our patients to relocate Japanese Americans of any type in our highly organized industrial state."

The executive council is to be commended for its forthrightness in stating its prejudice. There is no mincing of words. The council speaks out loud and clear against giving fellow Americans an equal chance.

The council hastens to add that if individuals wish to hire Japanese American assistants they may do so and that individual members of the society will not be subject to disciplinary action if they do hire Japanese Americans.

What generosity! What magnanimity! The society is truly broad minded! It will not discipline a member who hires a fellow American who can meet all the necessary state license requirements. One wonders just what would happen to the society if it did try to discipline a member on this basis. It is a pretty good guess that the society would come out second best.

We are told by war relocation authorities that there is a shortage of dental laboratory technicians and hygienists. We have heard dentists complaining of their overwork. We know that under the selective service law, no Japanese American, or anybody else, can keep a job after the soldier or sailor or flier or WAC or WAVE, who held it before, comes back from war. Japanese Americans cannot keep other Americans from getting their jobs back when they return to civilian life.

The Milwaukee County Dental Society will take up the question of Japanese American assistants at its next meeting. It will have a chance, if it chooses, to show a broader understanding of American democracy than the state executive council has shown.

The council's action is disgraceful—Editorial in the Milwaukee Journal of Aug. 4, 1943.

Continued Restrictions On Evacuees Favored By Rep. Johnson

SACRAMENTO, Calif.—Rep. Leroy Johnson, R., Calif., visiting Sacramento while on a swing through his congressional district last week stated that his plan for deporting aliens of Japanese ancestry after the war has won the support of members of the western delegations to Congress.

Johnson also said he favored the deportation of persons of Japanese ancestry who have been found by the courts to be guilty of subversive activities. Johnson said his proposal is contained in a house resolution introduced on June 21. He stated that at the same time he had also introduced a bill for the creation of a Japanese Deportation Commission by Congress.

Army Recalls Nine Ex-Soldiers From Gila River Center

RIVERS, Ariz.—The News-Courier reported that nine Japanese American evacuees at the Gila River WRA center, who received honorable discharges from the Army after Pearl Harbor, had received recall notices on August 2.

They were scheduled to have left Gila River this week to report to the Salt Lake City, Utah induction station where they will go to Camp Shelby, Miss. It was reported that when the men received their honorable discharges, they were told that they would be called again on 24-hour notice, if needed.

Seek Repeal Of Chinese Exclusion Law

Japanese Propaganda Points Toward Separate China Peace, Is View

WASHINGTON — Repeal of the Chinese exclusion act was urged by Representatives Gossett, D., Texas, this week in order to offset Japanese propaganda which he said "is definitely pointing toward a separate peace with China."

Gossett indicated he would press for immediate consideration of the exclusion act repeal measure "as soon as Congress reconvenes."

Gossett, a member of the house immigration committee, declared the Japanese have adopted separate peace tactics by "relenting on atrocities" in occupied China and by trying to win over the people of these territories, even to the extent of "passing out candy to Chinese children."

"And the Nipponese," Gossett said, "probably will offer liberal terms, including the delivery of Hong Kong to the Chinese government. They would hope by such a move to be able to prolong the war with us or to negotiate better peace terms with us."

Gossett is the author of a bill proposing to reduce over-all immigration, permit entry of 100 Chinese annually and allow Chinese already legally resident in America to become citizens.

Although it held long hearings on bills proposing repeal of the Chinese exclusion act, the immigration committee has not presented legislation to the house floor for action.

AFL Council Would Retain Exclusion Law on Chinese

CHICAGO—The American Federation of Labor executive council voted on Aug. 10 to oppose modification of the Asiatic Exclusion Act to admit a quota of Chinese annually.

President William Green announced the action.

Granada Police Hunt Down Report of 'Ghost' at Camp

Fair Indian Princess Visits Relocation Center, Say Amache Evacuees

AMACHE, Colo.—The ghost of Amache, beautiful daughter of Ochi-Nee, Cheyenne Indian tribal chieftan of the Arkansas valley, walks at night in Granada—the evacuee relocation center in southeastern Colorado, according to the International News Service which quotes "frightened evacuees."

According to the story, fair Amache walks (and even takes shower baths) in the Japanese relocation center. However, three policemen assigned to investigate the report have found nothing to bear out the rumors.

Joe McClelland, relocation official, reported that some evacuees had said they had "caught glimpses of a strange luminous figure emerging from a shower room and strolling around the camp."

Hunt Evacuees Observe First Anniversary

Population of Minidoka Center Hits All-Time Low on August 5

HUNT, Idaho — The War Relocation Authority center here observed the first anniversary of its existence last week. On August 10, 1942, as the first group of evacuees to come here, a contingent of 212 persons from the Puyallup assembly center established residence here and founded this "city of Minidoka." The center was then about 75 per cent completed.

The main movement of evacuees, at the rate of 500 a day, started on August 16; and after the evacuees at the Puyallup center had been transferred, a group from the North Portland center was received. The population of the center on September 14, when the movement was completed, was 9381.

The next day, some evacuees started moving out of the center to meet a farm labor emergency which had developed in southern Idaho. There were 2400 evacuees from the center who worked in harvest fields.

The peak population of the year was reached February 26 when 190 former residents of Bainbridge Island, Wash., were transferred from the Manzanar relocation center to Hunt, raising Hunt's population to 9393.

The population on August 5, 1943, dropped to 7170, a new all-time low.

The WRA's program of resettlement of evacuees throughout the United States, except in the evacuated coast zone, has resulted in 1667 leaving the center permanently.

Denson Completes Big Bayou Bridge To Deep Elm

DENSON, Ark.—The Big Bayou Bridge No. 6, connecting the Jerome relocation center with all roads leading to Deep Elm was officially opened for traffic last month, reports the Denson Tribune.

The 16-foot span was constructed by the Public Works division in eight weeks, and almost all materials used was made within the center.

The project sawmill turned out 31,485 board feet of oak lumber for the bridge.

HONOLULU, T. H. — Inter-racial relations between American soldiers of Japanese ancestry and soldiers and civilians of other races in and near Camp Shelby, Miss., are satisfactory and entirely without serious incident, military authorities of the Hawaiian department of the U. S. Army announced on July 23, according to the Honolulu Star-Bulletin.

The announcement was made in Honolulu on the basis of a thorough report received from Camp Shelby intelligence offices in response to a request from the Hawaiian department for a close survey of the situation.

The Star-Bulletin said that the Hawaiian department requested the investigation after receiving numerous reports of "wild rumors" circulating in Hawaii, which may have been enemy inspired.

"At least, the effect of these disturbing rumors served a very definite enemy purpose by causing uncertainty and fright among some Hawaii families of the Camp Shelby soldiers of Japanese extraction," Hawaiian department authorities said.

Rumor mongers in Hawaii painted a wild picture of "riots, insurrection and serious racial disorders at and near Camp Shelby," it was reported.

"The stories they told are absolutely untrue," the report from Camp Shelby said.

Actually, only one potentially serious interracial situation has developed at Camp Shelby and that involved the reaction of fans at a boxing match in which an American soldier of Japanese ancestry had been matched against a Caucasian in the ring.

This episode, as well as remarks on natural, non-racial minor irritations at the camp, are covered in the Camp Shelby intelligence reports, as follows:

"There have been isolated, wholly unrelated incidents of minor nature at this station involving Caucasian troops and Japanese-Americans, in each instance generated by spur of the moment group conflict rather than racial or national animosity. Individual physical combat at this station is rare.

"Upon one occasion, during the emotional pitch of a closely contested boxing match between a white soldier and a Japanese-American, the challenge of physical contest was taken up by seconds and sympathizers, and a general melee was narrowly avoided.

"Similar incidents between contestants of the same race would have been a matter of small moment, causing only a ripple of excitement, attributed to hot-headed youths 'blowing off a little steam.'"

The report also brought out that "association between Japanese-American and native American Caucasian soldiers at this station, is neither encouraged nor discouraged.

"As a group, the Japanese-Americans, largely because of mutual interests and common origin, generally keep to themselves, by their own choice.

"Japanese-Americans have received splendid press notices at this station. Their eagerness to buy war bonds, their generous nature, their accomplishments as soldiers and as individuals, have been well publicized.

"It is the opinion of the reporting offices that possibly they have been over publicized, to their own embarrassment at times, and quite conceivably at the expense of creating unwarranted jealousy by other soldiers."

Why Little Tokyos?

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer chooses to place the cart before the horse when it argues, as it did recently, that "Japanese, congregating in larger Pacific Coast cities, have given point to Kipling's famous statement about the East and West."

Racial segregation, of which the Little Tokyos were practical examples, is never the wish of the segregated group. The Japtowns, Chinatowns and the Little Mexicos of the West coast grew out of the black seeds of social and economic discrimination. Racial communities are created by housing restrictions which, on the west coast, often bar non-whites from the more desirable residential areas. They are nurtured by limited social acceptance of the racial group by the community as a whole. And the limitation of opportunity forces upon the racial group an introversion of its economic life, completing the pattern of mono-racial existence.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer states the obvious when it declares that there is no reason, and no place, for "foreign colonies" in our country. But the newspaper chooses to ignore the factors which bred these "foreign colonies."

Today in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and to a limited extent in other cities, the Little Tokyos have been replaced by war-born Harlems. Negro workers, steaming into labor-hungry west coast communities from the southern states, have settled in urban districts left vacant by the evacuation of residents of Japanese ancestry. In San Francisco alone there has been a 127 per cent growth in the number of Negro residents and the same interests which clamored for evacuation are now crying about this new racial "problem." In Los Angeles Mayor Bowron, who has often given lip service to democracy but who has played to the hilt the racist demagoguery of California's professional patriots, has expressed his shock at the fact that the "evacuated Japs" have been replaced by a Negro colony in the very shadow of the City Hall. There has been a tendency in Hearts press to lay the blame for the intolerable housing conditions to which these Negro workers have been subjected at the feet of the evacuated Japanese Americans, overlooking the fact that these Japanese Americans were often forced to accept substandard housing because of the unavailability of other accommodations. It is also a fact that these areas are far more crowded today than they ever were before evacuation. It has been estimated that 18,000 Negroes live today in the former Japanese district in San Francisco. Before the war this district accommodated no more than 5,000 Japanese Americans. This criminal overcrowding and segregation of Negro workers and their families exposes the need for constructive planning and an appreciation of the basic problems of this minority. The Hearst press, if it is consistent with its past policies, will probably decide that the Negroes are to blame for the growth of this new western Harlem as it has indicted the Japanese Americans for living in the Little Tokyos.

The Japtowns of the west coast were destroyed, virtually by military decree, through the evacuation process. A program of dispersal of Americans of Japanese ancestry throughout the United States is now in progress through the war relocation program. If the relocated Japanese Americans are given a fair chance at social acceptance and economic opportunity, no new Little Tokyos will arise.

Behind the Zoot Suits

That new day phenomenon known as "zoot suitism" has had its outcroppings among the nisei, both among those in the centers and those who have relocated to major cities of the midwest.

It is a common fallacy, backed by false interpretations of recent race riots in Los Angeles, Detroit and other cities, that zoot suitism is a racial characteristic.

But this is not true, save in that it reflects the sub-democratic treatment of our minority groups.

This is an economic and social problem, not a purely racial one. The background that nurtured zoot suitism is a sad and sorry one. It is one that cries loudly of inadequate housing, of social ostracism, of herded racial groups, of inadequate recreational facilities. It speaks of a childhood nurtured on social fear. The zoot suit and its wearer are the logical outgrowths of the crowded streets of Harlem, of the alleys of Los Angeles, of the tenements of Chicago, and of that whole dark and dreary world, black and white, beyond the railroad tracks.

The child who yesterday fed on social and economic insecurity has grown up today into the wearer of the zoot suit.

These are the problems we must face, the social ills we must cure before we eradicate the surface ills — the zoot suits.

For nisei, perhaps, these social problems have been true to a lesser degree. But what has since happened to many a nisei youth has been sufficient to throw him defensively into the lost world of the zoot suits. He cannot yet justify to himself the whole uprooting of evacuation. He relocated, and he became a youth without a home and without a family. He has lost the old familiar patterns of life and he cannot find new ones. He finds himself in the dim world of the pool halls and the back alleys.

There is, too, at the present time, an alarming increase in juvenile delinquency in the nation, a delinquency born of wartime uprooting, of a sudden abundance of money, of children without supervision.

All these are ills we cannot ignore. But these will be pointed out a thousand times over, as they have been repeated a thousand times in the past, before action will be taken to cure them. And the ills are not only deep-rooted, they are many. We must, before we expect their cure, revise our whole attitude toward our handling of racial groups and their problems. We must offer all racial groups that security and that social acceptance that has been so long denied them.

For a short range program, we must supply adequate housing, proper recreational facilities and increased educational possibilities. We must make it worth while to these youths to be American citizens in a truly free world.

Beyond Segregation

In addition to some 6500 who have applied for repatriation or expatriation to Japan, other evacuees who gave non-affirmative answers to the loyalty question during the registrations last February and March will be sent shortly to the War Relocation Authority's segregation camp at Tule Lake.

The segregation phase of the war relocation program, which is to get under way next month, should not stop with the isolation of the repatriates, expatriates and others of questionable loyalty in a single camp. It must be continued, especially in reference to those who gave non-affirmative or unsatisfactory answers to the loyalty question, even after the physical process of confinement in an isolation center is completed. There are many among those who are to be sent to Tule Lake whose "disloyalty" does not extend beyond the fact that their confidence in America and in democracy have been shattered by the experience of evacuation and of detention in the evacuation camps. They are disillusioned regarding their future chances for survival in America and take the hysterical fulminations of the race hatred bloc on the west coast as the expressions of the whole American people. Although it is an integral part of the relocation program that such persons whose loyalty is under question be segregated, an effort should be made to restore the faith and loyalty of these people so that they may once again be able to take their place alongside other Americans. There are others, of course, who have indicated that their sympathies lie with the military overlords of an enemy Japan. For these persons the course of detention is clear.

The Unholy Coalition

Members of the California congressional bloc, who want to make it tough for Americans with Japanese faces to ever get back to their homes on the west coast, apparently do not mind indulging in a little log-rolling to accomplish their purpose. An unholy coalition with some of the "white supremacy" boys from the deep South is looked upon with favor, the idea being that if the southerners will back the west coast congressmen in their demand for restrictions against Japanese Americans, the coast will reciprocate if the poll-taxers need any help in keeping the Negro in his place.

Representative Leroy Johnson, an anti-New Deal Republican from Stockton who probably remembers that another Johnson, Hiram by name, rode to political glory and a seat in the Senate by saving California from the "yellow peril," told the Lions club in Sacramento last week that a coalition of west coast and southern congressmen may make his program to deport one-half of America's population of Japanese ancestry an actuality. Representative Johnson said by way of oratorical footnote that eastern congressmen were an obstacle to his campaign of deporting all alien Japanese and all "disloyal" Japanese Americans. He said, however, that the men from the south "where another race problem exists" tend more to side with the westerners.

Mr. Johnson, being a member of the extreme racist wing of the coast delegation, can hardly be considered a representative Pacific coast congressman. His record in his first term has shown that he is against labor and the small farmer and is a friend of the Associated Farmers and the big industrialists. He has shown that he is not above persecuting a racial minority group for political advantage. And he is now looking for support from southern reactionaries and racial fascists to carry out his vindictive campaign against Americans of Japanese ancestry.

It is already a matter of record that there has been at least spiritual affinity between some of the more violent race-baiters of the south and far west. During the last session of congress the vicious bill to put all persons of Japanese ancestry in concentration camps was sponsored in the Senate by Stewart of Tennessee and in the lower house by the Jim Crow poll-taxer, Rankin of Mississippi. Mr. Rankin has made more violent speeches in the House and has probably inserted more bunk in the Congressional Record regarding the nisei than any other man on Capitol Hill, although it is to be doubted that he has ever met a Japanese American. The activities of another southerner, Martin Dies, and the abortive investigation of Japanese Americans by the committee which bears his name, has been too well publicized to bear repetition.

Because the hate-mongers usually get the headlines, it is not surprising that many Japanese Americans have a distorted perspective regarding the power and influence of the race hatred bloc. The sympathetic concern expressed at the recent statewide conferences of two of the largest Protestant denominations, the Presbyterians and the Churches of Christ, regarding the wartime problems of Americans of Japanese ancestry, should serve to correct that perspective and prove that public opinion on the west coast is not determined solely by the Native Sons, the American Legion or by such congressmen as Leroy Johnson or John Anderson.

It should also be remembered that congress, on the whole, has hewed closely to basic American principles of fair dealing regarding the domestic "Japanese problem," despite the urging of certain members for a wartime program of restrictive legislation. During the preceding session, in 1942, an effort by Senator Stewart to railroad his "concentration camp" bill through the Senate was blocked by a liberal Republican, Ball of Minnesota; a conservative, Taft of Ohio; and, a New Dealer, Murdock of Utah.

The congress now in recess has been described as being the most reactionary since the days of the Hoovervilles and the breadlines. A determined effort has been made by the ultra conservatives to scrap the social legislation enacted under the New Deal of Franklin Roosevelt. The running tide of reaction has received little opposition from a President preoccupied with the business of war. A recent study of the votes of congressmen and senators on certain key legislation discloses that most of the men who have advocated everything from legal restrictions on Japanese Americans to wholesale exclusion and deportation are, in general, the men who prefer property rights to human rights. They are men who would rather quibble while the world burns, who would turn back the clock of our social legislation while the boys are away fighting a war.

It is significant that Leroy Johnson, Anderson, Hinshaw and Gearhart of California, Rankin of Mississippi, Angell and Holman of Oregon, Robertson and Barrett of Wyoming, Revercomb of West Virginia, McKeller and Stewart of Tennessee and Dies of Texas are among those who have a record of opposition to most of the administration's legislative program. Each of these men have committed themselves in public statements or in congressional discussion in favor of the persecution of Japanese Americans because of racial ancestry. And the nisei are only a part of the whole problem of human rights as opposed to property rights.

With the growing popularity of brightly-colored print shirts in the Poston wardrobe, boys are now feeling the embarrassing moments which hitherto have been reserved for the fairer sex. Since the mail order houses are limited in number and variety, the following scene has become a common occurrence. Coming shirt to shirt with another person wearing the same apparel definitely has its disturbing moments. What can one do but smile weakly and murmur, "Nice shirt you got on. You sure got good taste, too."—From "One/Fourth," Poston Chronicle.

A Nisei Learns About Jim Crow

"She talked with me, walking about under the trees by the bus stop at a place called 'Echo Valley' in Utah. She was as black as she could be, with a shiny face, and she wore a rumpled white cotton dress. She was a young Negro woman in her early twenties. She had got on our bus at Cheyenne. She said that she was going to Brigham, Utah, to visit the Navy hospital where her husband was. He had been in the navy and was wounded in action off Australia.

"We parted at Ogden. Later at Salt Lake, Hiroshi said to me, 'Do you remember that Negro girl with the white dress? After we ate breakfast this morning at that little town I found out that all the restaurants had refused to serve a Negro. She was hungry, so she gave me a quarter and asked me to buy her a sandwich.' They get it plenty tough."

"I thought of her traveling all the way from Memphis alone; I thought of her husband wounded in action. Our 'Democracy' has a long way to go yet."—From "Outside," by Shuji Kimura in the Tulean Dispatch Magazine.

Vagaries

Tule Lakers

Present indications are that few of the repatriates to be segregated at the Tule Lake center will have an opportunity for passage to Japan during the war. It's been estimated that perhaps 150 of the group of some 1500 to sail on the Gripsholm shortly will be from relocation centers. One thing that has delayed the exchanging of Japanese nationals is the fact that Tokyo must request the return of each individual repatriate through the Spanish government before the exchange can be made . . . It's interesting that only about ten per cent of the persons whom the Japanese government will approve for repatriation want to go to Japan. In fact, the great majority of the persons who have been advised that their passage to Japan on the Gripsholm would be approved have declined, without thanks. In fact, most of the replies have been blistering in nature and there has been no better expression of the loyalty of these persons to the United States than in these replies to the question: "Do you want to go to Japan?"

Superman

Clark Kent, alias Superman, has just about finished his one-man campaign against "Jap saboteurs" in and out of the relocation centers but the cartoonists and the distributing syndicate haven't heard the last of the protests evoked by their misrepresentation of the WRA centers as internment camps for dangerous persons. Many national organizations, including church and liberal groups, as well as a national labor union, have protested Superman's misguided attack on a racial group.

Survey

In order to test student opinion regarding Americans of Japanese ancestry, the Student Relations committee on the University of California campus at Berkeley is planning to conduct a poll on the problem. Other surveys are planned of student opinion on the Chinese exclusion act and the situation of Mexican Americans in Los Angeles . . . The case of an AFL union's discriminatory stand on Japanese Americans may be the first case to be taken up by the newly organized unit of the President's Fair Employment Practice committee in the Salt Lake area . . . Min Yasui, whose test case on the validity of the military curfew on Japanese Americans in the West coast defense zone was recently determined by the Supreme Court, is now at the Minidoka relocation center after eight and a half months in solitary confinement at the Multnomah county jail in Portland.

News of the Nisei

Kenji Okuda, an evacuee from the Tule Lake relocation center, last year entered Oberlin college in Ohio, was shortly elected president of the student body. Excerpts from a recent letter from him follow:

"During the month of June, which was a vacation between terms for us, several of us have done considerable traveling. William Makino from Seattle and the University of Washington, Sammy Oi from Los Angeles and UCLA (Granada Project and May Kitazawa (Heart Mountain) represented part of the delegation of students from Oberlin College to the summer conference of the student YMCA-YWCA at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. Dave Okada of Sacramento (Tule Lake) has participated as counsellor at a Methodist summer camp for young people for a week and spoken a number of times in neighboring communities, such as Lakewood (suburb of Cleveland), Lorain, Elyria and Sandusky.

"I have been particularly fortunate receiving an invitation to two summer conferences of the Congregational Pilgrim Fellowship in Coral Gables (near Miami) and Winter Park, (southeast of Jacksonville,) Florida, spending a week at each. Having had no real opportunity to discover community sentiment, I cannot make any observations as to attitudes in that region of the country, but the young people with whom I worked respond-

A Nisei Writes in 'Liberty': Mary Oyama Draws from Her Personal Experiences to Tell A Poignant Evacuation Story

Within a twelve-month period, Mary Oyama, like seventy thousand other nisei, followed a strange itinerary to many a strange new world. For Mary Oyama, there was first "a brand-new dream house" in Los Angeles. It sat on top of a hill, "a little white six-roomed cottage with sky blue shutters and gay tinkly door chimes."

Then came Santa Anita, and the new assembly center home. It was a former stall for race horses. But it was named "Valley Forge."

"I had an American flag sent in from the outside. Flag after flag was put up in those stalls 'so that,' as one young mother expressed it, 'the very young children will always know that this is America.'"

Then there was a train-ride, ending at Heart Mountain, Wyoming, a city of dust and barracks. And then came Denver and freedom.

It is of this period, from freedom and security in Los Angeles, through confinement, and out to freedom again that Mary Oyama writes in her article, "My Only Crime is My Face," in the August 14 issue of Liberty magazine.

Here, for the first time in a national periodical is the simple story of evacuation told by one who waited out her months before freedom in the wire and watchtower land of the evacuee centers.

Most evacuees found a balance of good and bad, of hope and fear in the centers. So did the author:

At first the crowd noise of 18,500 people jammed in together (in Santa Anita) was so terrific that I thought I would never become accustomed to it. As the partitions between the stalls reached up only a few feet, we could hear every sound made by neighboring families. It was a vast composite roar, an ocean of sound made up of talking people, crying babies, shouting voices, blaring radios, the tramping and shuffling of feet, and even more unpleasant noises.

"But on visiting days, to bolster up our morale, came fellow Americans I shall never forget: College students, former employees, teachers, ministers, Y workers, laborers, soldiers and sailors.

"They laughed, they cried. They brought fruits, cookies, candies, books, magazines. In the thick dust and sticky summer heat, above the dinning babel of voices, old friends jammed up tightly against the wire fence, shocked to see their Nisei friends 'caged in.' There was the day when some one brought a dog which had formerly belonged to a Nisei couple with a small baby girl. The dog wagged his tail violently upon recognizing his former owners. The Nisei mother pushed the perambulator closer, right up against the fence. (The M. P. guard looked as if about to say something, but didn't; instead, like a good egg, he walked off in the opposite direction.) The child stuck a chubby fist through the fence. The dog licked the little hand affectionately and he kissed the tops of her tiny shoes. Some people took out their handkerchiefs and blew their noses hard. . . ."

And that was how it was, Americans on one side of the fence, Americans on the other, but the fence went all around the one group.

"I used to tell myself in the camp that my only crime was my face," says Mary Oyama. "But now, when I look in the mirror, I remember what a friend once said: 'When I first met you, Mary, I couldn't get over the novelty of your Japanese face. Strange that an American like you should look like that. First it was ninety per cent strangeness and novelty and ed favorably. I was surprised at the fact that there were as many Japanese in Florida scattered throughout the state from Miami Beach to St. Petersburg as I was led to believe by talk with various individuals. I would hazard a guess that there are at least 100 and more permanent residents in Florida.

maybe ten per cent friendly interest. About the second time I saw you, it was fifty per cent novelty and fifty per cent friendliness. Now I begin to notice less what you look like and to know more what you really are. Pretty soon I'll forget what you look like altogether, I'll know you only as another fellow American."

Other articles on evacuation have touched almost all phases of this picture, but this article does not trouble itself with the political picture, the sociological picture or what we call civil liberties. Nor is this any defense of or argument for the nisei position, save in that the simplicity and wholly American attitude of this article shows the nisei as they are: "It did us no good to argue that we had sons and brothers in the army, that we were loyal to this land of our birth, that we spoke only English, that we praised the Lord in Christian churches and were ready to pass the ammunition, if they'd only let us."

Mary Oyama's article will bring the evacuee scene home to the non-Japanese reader, will bring back full strength an old familiar story to the evacuee.

War in Sicily

The Sicilian campaign, which started on July 10, was virtually completed one month after its start. The inexorable march to Messina continued, and the American, Canadian and British troops were coming closer together as they continued their advance toward the northeastern tip of the island. Already, from their positions on the west coast, British army forces could see the mainland of Italy across the channel.

For the sixth time since the start of the war, Winston Churchill will meet with President Roosevelt. Churchill this week was in Quebec, meeting with Britain's topflight military men. Newsmen were agreed that allied leaders were laying plans for the grand offensive in Europe and "victory this year."

Radio Tokyo this week announced, among other things, that General Hiroshi Oshima, Japanese Ambassador to Berlin, conferred for two hours with Hitler and von Ribbentrop on the future military situation in Europe and German counter-plans, then left Berlin; that Maj. Gen. Hakushi Shinohara, assistant military attache at the Japanese Embassy in Russia, has been recalled and replaced by Gen. Isamu Asai.

Life in the U. S.

While overseas, ravaged populations struggled to live off of war-torn lands and armies clashed in a dozen sphere-scattered battlegrounds, life in the U. S. to some of her citizens, at least, went on at a peacetime rate. Brash Hollywood, which heretofore has welcomed anything and everything from wild-eyed evangelists to soothsayers, pulled up its skirts in horror on learning that crooner Frank Sinatra was scheduled to make an appearance at the Hollywood Bowl. Hollywood's teen-age daughters, however, reacted true to jitterbug type. When Sinatra pulled in at the station in Pasadena, 5,000 girls screamed, clawed, and fought to get a close view of their idol . . .

Newspapermen Are Sympathetic, Curious, Lazy

We have just finished talking with a group of newspapermen from various parts of Montana and Wyoming who came to make a first-hand inspection of the Heart Mountain project at the invitation of the War Relocation Authority. Since we asked about as many questions as they did, we found these inland typewriter pounders not far different from men of their profession elsewhere.

In other words visiting newspapermen were curious, sympathetic, honest and lazy. They were curious about conditions at the center. They were honest in their evaluation of the human problems involved in evacuation and relocation, and sympathetic toward the difficulties of the evacuees. And they were also willing to take the easiest course, which in the case of some, led to the Irma hotel bar rather than prowling about the center on their own after working hours.

We have not seen any of the stories these men will publish in their respective papers, for the most part journals of strictly local interest with the view that a dog fight on Main street is of more significance than a race riot in Harlem. But we are confident that they will be honest reports of what they saw.

In almost every instance when good working newspapermen who have not sold their souls to the vested interests of their publishers have been confronted face to face with the facts of evacuation, the result has been an honest, straightforward story.

Even when Pacific coast writers have reported on center conditions, the result usually has been a fair appraisal. There was one series of stories we remember, published in a well-known California newspaper under a woman's by-line, in which the conflict between honest reporting, and writing what some of her public expected, was apparent. She wrote with a sneer about some things, and with a pseudo hard-boiled cynicism about others in a too obvious effort to conceal the fact that she was deeply touched by what she had seen.

We wonder what the effect would have been if the War Relocation Authority had carried on an aggressive public relations program from the very beginning, inviting the press to visit the centers during their earliest days and circulating choice bits of human interest material and pictures, rather than holding back and being most cordial after the press itself took the initiative to find out about camp conditions.

The fact that newspapermen for the most part are lazy is a strong argument for a positive public relations program by the JACL, individual nisei and the WRA. The day of great, personalized journalists who would crusade for lost causes of their choosing is on the wane, and those that remain have their choice of dozens of momentous causes to espouse other than the relatively minor one of evacuation and resettlement.

And run of the mill editors and writers, despite whatever interest they may hold in the nisei problem, have neither the time nor the energy these days to cover and write up stories out of the routine.

It is unfair to judge all newspapers by the organs of vested interests which perennially have pet axes to be ground in order to maintain circulation. Jack Carberry, the author of the Denver Post's series directed against Heart Mountain, came to the center with his mind made up and all the so-called facts in his pocket. The few hours he spent on the project were just enough to give an air of authenticity to his stories and to pick up garbled quotations which might be used in the most misleading manner.

The same tactics were used by the Hearst hirelings who took every undocumented charge Dies committee investigators bandied about, and published them as the gospel truth.

The negative side of the freedom of the press cherished by Americans is the damage that irresponsible editors can do by careless or malicious disregard of the responsibilities that are a corollary to freedom of any sort.

Truth, as always, is the only weapon with which to fight the lies that those who hate us, or who hate the administration and hope to hurt it by attacking us, have spread so widely. We have the fundamental moral honesty of

EDITORIAL DIGEST

In Refutation

In a lengthy editorial refuting arguments of Martin V. Coffey, commander of the American Legion in Ohio, the Oberlin, Ohio, News-Tribune offered evidence of the loyalty of Japanese Americans.

In the editorial on July 8, the News-Tribune countered Commander Coffey's contention that the nisei were a potentially dangerous group. According to the Oberlin paper there has been considerable evidence of Japanese American loyalty. "The final, most convincing evidence of all is the record of those thousands of Japanese Americans who already are serving in our armed forces, are working in factories and on our farms. Neither Commander Coffey nor anyone else can cite any objectionable behavior on their part. On the contrary, their record is excellent. Their abilities and energies are needed to help win the war. They are anxious to serve and the government is certainly right in so far as it now gives them every opportunity to serve.

"So long as they are kept behind barbed wire their morale — and we can well imagine, their loyalty — will steadily deteriorate. Obviously there should long ago have been strict segregation in the relocation camps of those persons whose loyalty is known to be questionable."

Welcome to Dayton

Another Ohio newspaper, the Dayton Journal, recently commented on the Japanese Americans. In its lead editorial of July 26, the Journal declared: "Give Loyal American - Born Japanese a Chance." The Dayton paper noted that although most Japanese Americans are loyal, "they are victims of prejudice and the drastic measures considered necessary in rounding up every possible spy in the frenzied days of December, 1941."

"Our nation has not dealt so harshly with citizens of Italian and German ancestry. And it is to the credit of the Nisei, 'Americans with Japanese faces,' that they bore their lot with patience."

The Dayton Journal noted that five of the transplanted Nisei civilians have come to make Dayton their home. "All college graduates, they have given up professional careers in vital defense areas to start life anew in inland cities. It is their personal contribution to the country that insures their freedom for all time. Yet, among us have been some who, upon first hearing of their presence, spoke out in unreasoning prejudice.

"A special effort, imbued with no little tolerance, should be made to help the members of this group reestablish themselves as useful and desirable members of our society."

EVACUESE

We note that the issei have added a new word to their vocabulary—used rather indiscriminately we fear—which we surmise is an addition of this year. It's "ba-lan-teah" . . . "ba-lan-teah this and ba-lan-teah that." Somewhere along the way the word seems to have acquired new inflections so that its meaning has undergone some distortion at times, but the older folks seem to like the sound of it for I hear it used profusely.—Minidoka Irrigator, in the column "Feminidoka."

Colorado Calling!

By JOE MASAOKA

PLEASANT INTERLUDE is the prospect when a field trip is the order of the day. With Pueblo, Colorado, some 110 miles south, as the destination, we made our exit from Denver skirting the banks of Cherry Creek. This creek which bisects the heart of this intermountain metropolis has had a hectic career. Its banks, smoothly concreted for flood control purposes, cost the city so much money that a municipal quarrel took place.

During the depression, my guide informed me, the WPA bought pans for the unemployed so that they could pan for gold in this creek. These depression gold hunters swarmed the creek and, it is claimed, their pay dirt averaged four dollars a day.

Such are the traces of an earlier Colorado glory when in the 1850's every covered wagon westward-bound was daubed with "Pike's Peak Or Bust"—"thar was gold in them thar hills." Cripple Creek was on the lips of every gold-fever mad prospector.

It all started with a half-wit cowboy who picked up a bright and shiny rock. He showed it to his saloon companions; they asked him where he found it. Mysteriously, men left town. The Cripple Creek gold rush was on. Colorado Springs boomed. Mineers swaggered into town and used buckskin pokes of gold dust as money. Weighing scales were the cash registers of those days. There was the Silver Dollar Saloon whose floor was solidly inlaid with silver dollars. The Gold Dollar Saloon was likewise floored with twenty dollar gold pieces and over its surface trod the boots and spurs of Colorado's early population.

STILL EARIER gold and lust form a part of Indian lore hereabouts. On the way to Colorado Springs there are twin peaks set apart from the rest of the mountain range. They are in the blue haze of distance and at their summits milky-white wisps of clouds curl away. They are known as the Spanish Peaks but the Indians called them "Waha Toyas" or the Breasts of the World. They believed that here was the center of the creation and that these breasts suckled the universe. These peaks also constituted the northern-most boundary of the Aztec Empire.

Between the two peaks was a hunter's paradise known as the Valley of the Rising Sun. Here the Indians waged no war but kept the truce of eternal peace. It was the white man who violated the sanctity of this hallowed ground. The Spanish came and enslaved the Indians and set them to work for the yellow gold which the conquerors craved with an insane lust. Under their driving urge the Indians were broken in body and spirit until the wrath of the outraged gods swept down upon the Valley of the Rising Sun.

Darkness covered the earth, the world shook, and the storms descended. When the sun shone again, all traces of the greed of man had been wiped out. The Valley had once again become a peaceful vale of mountain streams and park-like vistas which again today tempt with trout and deer. The Spanish who came to seek the lost mines found only a shining sword and a golden goblet on a slab of rock. These mementos can be seen today in the Museum at Mexico City.

REMINISCENT of the English investments which aided in the development of the West is the population of Colorado Springs, known as "Little London." English money poured into mines, railroads and cattle ranches. The absentee owners often visited their properties and often stayed. That's why a clipped English accent is frequently heard.

Nearby Camp Carson has more than doubled the population. Relocation is reportedly to have swelled the Japanese inhabitants to about three score and over. We met Miss Faye Shimono, formerly active with the Seattle JACL. Thence—

ON TO PUEBLO, Pittsburg of the state. Peculiarly enough, the steel mills are located on the north bank of the Arkansas River. This was a canny precaution on the part of the mill owners, since in earlier days there was talk of returning the Mexican Cession to our south-

Ann Nisei's Column:

There's Nothing Startling Nor New in Autumn Fashion Scene

As might be expected, there's nothing new nor startling about the fall fashion scene, 1943. There can't be, of course, with the wool and cotton shortages, the labor shortage, and the general war situation.

Those styles that were good in the fall of last year are still your best bets this season—the trim, tailored suit; the simple sport dress; the straight sport coat or the chesterfield; the tuxedo coat, for dressier wear.

Some seasons ago, clothes reached a new high for adaptability, utility, simplicity. For the duration, anyway, those styles are here to stay.

Of course, there'll be some changes, though there are no extravagant ones and none that will outmode anything you have now. These changes are more in the nature of "extras." You can take them or leave them.

For instance, there will be a good many silly hats this year—sillier than in years past, perhaps. This is doubtless to offset the extreme simplicity of the rest of your wardrobe. There won't be any very big hats, but even the tiny ones can be pretty silly. We hope you'll stay away from most of them. The nisei gal who can wear a Chinese rice bowl atop her head with aplomb is very rare. But other styles—you might be able to get away with a modified coolie hat, and you might look pretty exotic in that.

There will be little doll-like affairs, sort of simplified bonnets. And there will probably be a type of helmet that fits close over your head and covers your hair completely.

Shoes, too, like hats, will show two types—the simple, useful sport shoe in pump or oxford style, and a dressier type. These dressy types include the buckled shoe and the open baby sandal with the high strap. But as far as we're concerned, we don't know of many persons who'll be able to fit something fancy into their ration allowance, unless they use all their husband's coupons as well.

As for dresses, look for a bit of nudity in clothes—practical, perhaps—in that they save yardage, but for no other reason. Early spring collections showed a number of sleeveless dresses—practically topless—as a matter of fact. Most of them were dressy afternoon or short evening dresses. Some were held up by straps, some by less. All had bare shoulders and low backs. A little startling, perhaps, but it may not be long before you'll be wearing them.

Of course, the cap sleeve is here for a while, and actually this sleeve is fairly becoming to most people. It's far better, actually, than the full, long sleeve, which tended to put most small figures off balance.

Skirts range from medium-full to very slim. Jackets are almost always fitted, shorter than previously.

If you've been rationed a G. I. pea jacket, you'll be glad to know that a modified pea jacket for women is new this year. You may be able to cut yours down a bit, though we rather like the way the girls in camp wear theirs—as is.

College girls will start some new fads this year, since war or no war, they have a proclivity for starting something every year. Chances are that this year it will be in the way of some very startling stockings—not merely the bright-colored ones they wore last year. This year they'll hit an extreme. Woven stripes, multi-colored stockings, stockings with bright designs. They'll doubtless look a bit like brother's unbearably loud socks—only woven full length.

ern neighbor and the south bank of the river would then have become foreign soil.

Mr. Sanzo Shigeta, old-timer and local steel mill worker, assured me nisei were well accepted and the local Japanese populace of a score or so were held in esteem. The future augurs well in such communities where Japanese are not likely to become menacing competitors for local jobs.

In general, however, anything you have from last year's wardrobe that is wearable will be perfectly good this year. We're inclined to think that it's wiser, as well as patriotic, to buy only what you absolutely must.

Clothes are very expensive this year. Quality has gone down, while prices have really skyrocketed. Whereas once it was possible to buy a suit of good wool, well-tailored, for about $30, that price will today buy only a shoddy suit, of inferior quality wool. If you've been looking around, you know that already.

That's due, not only to shortages, but the increased buying power of the nation. Most people have more to spend, fewer things to buy.

We feel that your old clothes will almost always wear as well as most clothes bought today. If you must buy new things, buy fewer items, but pay more for them. But do buy the best quality available.

"Japanese Labor" Not Wanted, Dempsey Says

SANTA FE, New Mexico — Governor John J. Dempsey said last week he was opposed to "importation of Japanese labor into New Mexico."

"Whether it's cheap Japanese labor or high-priced Japanese labor, I'm against it," the governor said. "I don't trust those people, and we don't want them here."

NEW YORK — The Japanese American Committee for Democracy has announced that Ambassador Joseph C. Grew's book, "Report from Tokyo," has been translated into Japanese and will be made available to Japanese readers in the United States shortly.

Topaz Group Will Leave September 13 For Tule Lake

TOPAZ, Utah — Four hundred and fifty persons bound for Tule Lake segregation camp from Topaz will leave here September 13 as the first group from this center, it was announced here by Charles F. Ernst, project director, according to the Topaz Times.

The community council has appointed a committee of five repatriates to cooperate with the residents and administrative personnel in the segregation program. The committee will meet three times weekly with the project director.

Interviewing of persons scheduled to go to Tule Lake began this week by the welfare department. Interviews are to be completed by August 20.

17,000 Evacuees Given Indefinite Leaves, Says Myer

SEATTLE—Approximately 17,000 loyal persons of Japanese ancestry are on leave from war relocation centers and the rate of release will be increased during the next few months, National Director Dillon S. Myer of the War Relocation Authority said Monday, the Associated Press reported.

"We feel that the manpower is more valuable outside the centers than in," Myer explained in an interview. "The centers, also, are not a good place in which to carry on an Americanization program."

The WRA's biggest problem, Myer added, will be persuading many of the evacuees that it is safe for them to leave the centers.

Letter-Box FROM OUR READERS

Democracy in Idaho

Dear Editor:

I recently witnessed a baseball game in Idaho Falls, Idaho, between the Idaho Falls Merchants and the Japanese team from Hunt, Idaho. Having only recently arrived here from Riverside, California, I was curious to see what the feelings and reactions were going to be. Everything went a long in the most usual manner, with rooting about equally divided. The real surprise came when a large group of soldiers came in and sat just in front of us. Now, I thought, the trouble is about to begin. Some of them had been drinking, and there was a lot of loud talk—things looked bad! But, contrary to all my expectations, the soldiers began a vigorous rooting for the Japanese team. I knew I was a long way from California, and that democracy was not dead, and that there was still hope for us.

Mabel Hutchinson
Sincerely,
Firth, Idaho

The following is an excerpt from a letter from a Poston school teacher:

After a month in Sonoma County with my father, I am now enroute back to Arizona for summer session at Fort Apache during August and then back to Poston in September. To anyone who isn't familiar with the circumstances, it sounds utterly insane to admit one is homesick for a concentration camp, but I am having that experience nevertheless. I love my children, I enjoy their parents, and I love the desert, so I will be happy to get back. The situation I love not at all, but since it has come about, I am grateful for the privilege of being there to do whatever I can to try to salvage something of value from the difficult circumstances in which other Americans find themselves.

GRACE NICHOLS.

Gentlemen:

Please find enclosed my check for $2.50 for which please send me the Pacific Citizen for another year.

I like the clear cut editorials in your paper and admire its policy of facing any and all issues confronting the Japanese American citizens and aliens alike with fairness to everyone concerned.

Our best wishes for the continuance of that fine little publication.

Very truly yours,
W. T. FREITAS,
San Juan Bautista,
California.

Mr. Bill Hosokawa,
c/o Pacific Citizen.

Dear Sir:

I would like to register an objection to your coined phrase "The California Mind." It reminds me of General DeWitt.

Do you think the fact that we have a bunch of people slightly impregnated with Hitlerism, justified you in bundling us all into the same category?

If we have a Costello, we also have a Jerry Voorhis who exposed the undemocratic method of Dies, and a Will Rogers, Jr. who spoke in the House against Dies, and a Committee for American Principles and Fair Play.

Yours truly,
T. B. SEARS,
Vallejo, Calif.

To the Editor: Received your second copy the other day, which interested me quite a deal. There are some nisei soldiers working in this hospital so I am forwarding the paper to them when I'm through. I joined the Army last November but unfortunately became ill and have been treated since the middle of January.

It is good to hear and read the voice of the nisei and thanks to you for all the editor's effort.
Pvt. JAMES KAMINISHI,
Fort Snelling hospital.

Nisei Baseball Star Aids Brigham City Nine in Tourney

H. Yamamoto, star third baseman and outfielder for the Brigham City Peaches, was named as a candidate for the northern nine in the forthcoming Utah Industrial League all-star contest on August 30.

Yamamoto, one of the league's leading hitters, aided the Brigham City nine in reaching the finals of the Utah state semi-pro championships. His hitting and fast baserunning played a major role Saturday when the Peaches defeated the Wendover Bombers, 7-6, in the semi-finals of the state tourney.

In the finals Saturday night the Brigham City nine fell apart before the hard-hitting Salt Lake Army Air Base, losing 6-20. The Air Base nine will represent Utah in the national semi-pro championships at Wichita, Kansas.

T. Yamamoto, a brother, is a catcher on the Brigham City nine.

Group Relocation On Farms Discussed By Government Officials

AMACHE, Colo.—Plans for the relocation of farm family units consisting of five or six families related by blood or former neighbors were discussed by WRA relocation supervisors in Washington recently, according to a report in the Granada Pioneer.

The Chicago WRA and its sub-offices will try to find 10 typical American towns between 1,000 and 10,000 population and find relocation possibilities for about six families in each town.

Topaz Dentists End Examinations On School Children

TOPAZ, Utah — Finishing four weeks of work, Topaz dentists last week completed dental examinations for local school children, examining about 1400 persons under 18 years of age, reports the Topaz Times.

Due to the fact that many of the boys and girls have been working outside or attending summer camp, the turnout for the tests was not complete, but about 75 per cent of the children under 18 were examined.

NEWELL, Calif.—Shigeo Nakanishi, Ellen Hasegawa and Mipoko Inouye, recent graduates of the Tri-State high school at Tule Lake, have been named as winners of scholarship grants amounting to about $250 per person, according to the Tulean Dispatch Daily.

Awards are presented by the Scholarship Award committee. Nearly $650 was realized for the scholarship fund.

Homemaking Group Receives Vegetables From Student Garden

AMACHE, Colo.—Fourteen and a half bushels of vegetables raised on the junior high school students' victory garden were donated recently to the Amache homemaking department, according to the Granada Pioneer.

Some of the vegetables will be canned by the homemaking department under the supervision of Mrs. Lottie E. More, instructor.

Evacuees Defeat Burley Nine, 13-9

TWIN FALLS, Idaho — The Hunt relocation center baseball club maintained its supremacy over teams in southcentral Idaho by defeating Burley, 13-9, in a game at the Minidoka diamond.

Not counting the two games they lost to the Idaho Falls nine in the Idaho semi-pro championships last week, the victory was the seventh straight for the evacuees in southcentral Idaho.

From the Daily Californian: Movement to Arouse Hatred Against Japanese Americans Threatens All Minority Groups

The movement to arouse hatred against persons in the United States of Japanese ancestry is rapidly getting out of control. The thing is dangerous. It is a threat to the rights of all minorities; it is striking down the barriers of hatred; it is furnishing fuel for Japanese propaganda against the United Nations in the Far East and for German propaganda against the United Nations in South America. It has got to be stopped by rational people before it becomes too big to handle in any peaceful and reasonable fashion.

Evidence of such a movement to arouse hatred against the Japanese in this country, both citizen and alien, is abundant. We have at our desk at this moment a pamphlet entitled "Slap the Jap" put out by an organization known as "The Home Front Commandos." The frontispiece bears the legend, "No Jap is now fit to associate with human beings." It contains this plea: "Join now and keep the Japs rats out of your hair."

"One-half million Japs in California — Do you want them in your hair?" "Unless something is done the 'Long Hairs' will put them back on your farm lands, as your neighbors, as your business competitors."

A clipping on our desk, a column for the Madera News entitled "The Editor's Pink Tea," reports that most of the ladies clubs of the country have joined the "Stop-the Jap" movement.

A wave of resolutions is passing through the Chambers of Commerce, American Legions, and city councils of the state urging that the Japanese, both citizen and alien, be kept out of California not only for the duration of the war but forever after.

The San Francisco Examiner on its editorial page ran a cartoon of some very repulsive looking Japanese saluting the American flag with their fingers crossed. It bore the following caption:

"Most of the Japs in the relocation centers, Nisei or not, keep their fingers crossed when they pledge allegiance to the American flag.

"It is entirely too difficult to tell a good Jap from a bad Jap to ever take a chance on allowing these enemies freedom anywhere."

Results of the mounting tide of irrational feeling against people of the Japanese race, whatever their background, have been to undermine the faith of the citizens of Japanese descent in the democratic principles professed by the land of their birth, to greatly impede any satisfactory settlement of the problem of the Japanese in the relocation centers, to arouse widespread disparagement of the rights of citizenship, flagrant attempts to disregard them altogether, and to provide fuel to the enemies of the United States for propaganda in maintaining the claims of this country to be fighting for the freedom of all men and the rights of all minorities are hollow.

This hatred of the people of the Japanese race in the United States is not simply a manifestation of the national hatred for the Japanese empire which American soldiers are fighting to destroy. It has been deliberately fomented for economic reasons. Its greatest strength is in rural districts, where the Japanese have been economic competitors to white farmers. Its greatest proponents have been large farmers in these districts. Hence the insistence that the Japanese be forbidden to return to the west coast ever.

This, then, is the problem that faces citizens of rational mentality and of the more restrained type of patriotism. It is our thesis here that the problem is particularly the concern of college students, who belong, for the most part, to the above class of citizens. It is further our thesis that this class of citizens has a decided responsibility to combat a situation which is becoming an actual menace to the nation.—An editorial in the Daily Californian of the University of California at Berkeley on July 28, 1943.

Japanese Americans Defended By Boeing Aircraft Worker

Opposes Persecution Of Minority in Letter To Seattle Newspaper

SEATTLE, Wash.—A twenty-one year old defense worker who has a brother in the Army Air Force and is employed in one of the giant Boeing Aircraft Company plants here told readers of the Seattle Daily Times last week that he considers Japanese Americans "as good Americans as my brother and myself."

The young aircraft worker, David J. McNett, in a featured letter to the editor of the Times, stated that he wished to speak on his brother's behalf and opposed "any form of discrimination against Japanese Americans that is not based on concrete, specific evidence and administered under constitutional authority."

"I have known some so-called 'Japs,'" he wrote. "Most of them I liked and respected. All of them I consider as good Americans as my brother and myself."

"The small amount of security gained by persecuting them is not worth the threat to our liberty that is contained in the unconstitutional proposals we have heard of lately. The same kind of reasoning that robs 'Japs' of their birthright, regardless of their loyalty and service to our country, is a weapon which can be used against Chinese, Filipinos, Negroes, Indians, Germans, Jews, Mexicans and Catholics."

Young McNett reminded readers who may have forgotten that this country is "composed entirely" of minorities, and warned:

"If one brick be taken from the wall, the rest are easier to loosen—and what has become of your wall?"

Another reminder of his was that there is "a world of difference" between the Japanese American educated to "the tolerance and democracy we like to regard as peculiarly our own" and the oppressed, deluded slaves doing the bidding of the Tojo government in Japan. Even the old charge of a lower standard of living than that maintained by other Americans is no longer valid with respect to the nisei, he added.

"Revocation of citizenship," McNett declared, "is unjust to the boys of Japanese ancestry that are now serving in our armed forces. Deportation is impossible and inhuman because this is the only home many of them have ever known."

He contended that it is even possible, "although perhaps harder" than in the case of the young American-born, to make loyal citizens of the Japan-born. But discriminatory treatment, he said, will alienate all of them.

McNett, who resides at 5015 18th N. E. in this city, concluded:

"Let us fight this war to win. Let us wipe the evils of fascism and aggression from the face of the earth quickly, thoroughly and completely. But—it is not necessary to give in to hysteria and bigotry to do it. All we need is courage and the faith that ours is the better way."

Oppose Proposal

The Marysville, Calif., Appeal Democrat and the Sacramento Union last week editorially condemned the WRA's plan to concentrate the segregated group of evacuees in the Tule Lake center in northern California. The two northern California dailies adopted the attitude: "Why bring them back to California?"

Japanese Alien, Facing Deportation, Attempts Suicide

The Associated Press reported Tuesday in a dispatch from Brigham City, Utah, that a 41-year-old Japanese national, identified only as Hoashi, formerly of Minidoka, had made two suicide attempts after being informed that he may be deported to Japan.

Hoashi was being held in the Box Elder county jail after being arrested in Corinne, Utah, for prowling.

"Japan is going to get a licking and I don't want to be there when it happens," he was quoted as having told officers.

Sheriff Warren E. Hyde said that the prisoner had attempted to strangle himself in his cell with a towel and had slashed himself with a razor after being told he may be deported to Japan.

Japanese Headstones In Cemetery Topped By Vandals, Report

A grave headstone of a Japanese family of Buddhist faith, in the city cemetery here, has aroused considerable comment because it bears a Buddhist swastika marking — often confused with the Nazi symbol.

According to S. Perry Lea, writing in the Deseret News of August 4, the monument has been toppled from its base several times, presumably by persons who read a sinister message into the association of a Japanese name with the "Nazi symbol."

Prompted to conduct an investigation of the matter, Lea went for information to the Rev. Masaru K. Kumata, executive director of the American Buddhist churches.

"The swastika is the oldest of geometric symbols on the earth," Rev. Kumata explained to him. "We didn't copy from the Germans, nor does the symbol indicate any connection between Japanese Buddhists and Germans."

"Buddhists have a saying that 'the turning of the wheel of law will crush all that is wrong.' The wheel spoken of in this saying is the religious symbol from which the Buddhist flyfoot, or four-foot cross, is derived."

Rev. Kumata further explained that the swastika represents the four L's of Buddhism — Light, Love, Life and Liberty.

He also suggested that in Sanskrit the swastika means "fortunate" and that it is universally accepted as a presentment and promise of good luck.

In one form or another this much-discussed emblem has been used as a symbol of welfare from very early times, Rev. Kumata said. It first appeared in the bronze age and occurs in Swiss lake dwellings.

"Some scholars see in the swastika a solar symbol," Rev. Kumata added. "It has also been variously interpreted as an evolution from the lotus-petal in architecture, and as a mystic design."

Lea's conclusion on the subject was: "From this it would appear that Hitler and his minions, seeking to gain favor and fortune, have adopted the universal good luck talisman of the ancients, and that a display of the swastika by other organizations and religions does not imply either connection with or adherence to Nazi principles."

Japanese American Combat Team News

CHAPLAINS LEND WILLING EAR TO WOES OF NISEI G. I. JOES

CAMP SHELBY, Miss.—It's the chaplain who bends his ear to the woes of G. I. Joes. When a soldier finds himself in any kind of difficulty he frequently goes to the man who wears the silver cross on his collar.

The Japanese Americans in combat team training here are no different. They're as religious as any other group of soldiers, but when they want advice of a personal nature, someone to confide in, someone to beef to or even share their joy, at their first opportunity they go looking for the chaplain.

Usually they don't have to look far. The Combat Team has two and a third one due to arrive next month. And the Chaplains keep close to the men, whether they are on the range, in bivouac, on the march or in garrison. The two chaplains now with the Combat Team are southerners, of Protestant denominations wise in the ways of the army and not unfamiliar with Japanese Americans.

They are Chaplains Captain John T. Barrett and First Lieutenant Thomas E. West.

Chaplain Barrett, born in New Orleans, La., has been in the army for six years and has served longer at Camp Shelby than any other chaplain on the post. He received his bachelor of divinity degree from Vanderbilt university after undergraduate study at Millsaps and Lambuth colleges, the latter in Jackson Tenn. His first contact with Orientals came with his college classmates and a former roommate is now a professor of far eastern languages at Harvard. Chaplain Barrett was one of the first half dozen officers to report to the Combat Team on its activation.

Chaplain West was born at Bacon's Castle, Va., has traveled in 36 foreign countries and has lectured in 20 of them. He has degrees from the University of Virginia, University of Richmond, the Baptist seminary at Louisville, Ky., and his D.D. from Georgetown college Kentucky. He studied music at Edinburgh, Milan, and Boston. His travels have included China and Japan, and he taught for a while at Shanghai University. His assignment with the Combat Team is his first as an army chaplain.

Both chaplains agree that the Japanese Americans are quite responsive to religious influences. Church services, all nondenominational, are unusually well attended with the various companies alternating in their sponsorship of the services.

A unique responsibility taken over by the chaplains is that of delivering birthday cakes to the nisei soldiers, mostly from Hawaii. It appears to have been a Hawaiian custom for parents to surprise their sons in the army with birthday cakes. The custom has not abated, despite the distance from home, and Chaplain Barrett estimates that he and his colleague have distributed an average of a dozen cakes a week to members of the Combat Team—usually with appropriate ceremonies at messhalls, and thoroughly enjoyed by the assembled groups.

On Mother's day this spring, the two chaplains arranged a special telegraph service to Hawaii and 247 telegrams were sent by soldiers here. A similar service for Father's day brought an equally enthusiastic response.

The third chaplain who is soon to join the Combat Team is the army's first chaplain of Japanese ancestry. He is First Lieutenant Masao Yamada of Honolulu, a graduate of Auburn Theological Seminary in New York and a Congregational minister who has said that "God and guns will win the war for the United Nations."

Special Rookie School Enlarged At Camp Shelby

CAMP SHELBY, Miss. — With volunteers for the Japanese American Combat Team still reporting in from mainland points, enrollment in the special Recruit School for late-comers has increased to over 300.

Organized to give those reporting late an opportunity to catch up with those who came in earlier, the Recruit School is arranged so that all enlisted men will receive the equivalent of the regular basic training course before being placed with their respective companies. Practically all of the members of the school are from the mainland inasmuch as the Hawaiian contingent arrived in a body.

The school is divided into three groups, with those reporting within the last three weeks in the third or last group. The majority of late-comers are from Heart Mountain, Poston, and Minidoka relocation centers and the midwest.

"All the men are progressing satisfactorily in their work and should be well equipped to rejoin their respective companies at the end of their special training, according to 1st Lt. David L. Moseley, commanding officer of the school.

Brothers Hold Reunion at Army Camp in Mississippi

CAMP SHELBY, Miss., August 2, 1943.—Because Mrs. Toshi Iwamoto of Haiku, Island of Maui, Hawaii, wanted a picture of her three sons and nephew who are in training here, the four soldiers had their first reunion since arriving early in April when they met at the camp photographer's shop last week.

When his mother wrote that she wanted their picture to hang beside her service flag, Pvt. Toshiro Iwamoto, 28, of the Japanese American Combat Team rounded up his younger brothers, Cpl. Yukitsugi, 26, and Pvt. Sueo, 22, as well as their cousin, Pvt. Masao Peter Iwamoto, 21.

"Training is so tough and with my brothers in different companies it was hard to get everyone together except on special occasions like this" explained Toshiro Iwamoto as the boys discussed their progress and exchanged information about home.

Cpl. Yukitsugi has been in the army since 1939, having been called in the first draft, while his brothers and cousin volunteered for the Combat Team in February.

Before their respective inductions, Toshiro worked in Honolulu installing plate glass windows, Yukitsugi was a service station attendant, Sueo was an employee of the Territorial Government, and Masao Peter worked in a defense plant.

The brothers have four sisters, all of whom are helping in defense industries while their three brothers are carrying on in the services.

Combat Team Group Visits Jerome Camp

CAMP SHELBY, Miss.—Thirty-six officers and men of the Engineers of the Japanese American Combat Team visited the Jerome Relocation Center at Denson, Arkansas, over the weekend.

They were guests of the center USO, with Miss Mary Nakahara acting as their chief hostess. They were entertained at dances and parties. "The men enjoyed themselves so much that many declared they would spend their furloughs at Jerome," declared 1st Lt. Gilbert D. Kobatoke, special service officer, who, with 1st Lt. Walter T. Matsumoto, made the arrangements for the junket.

Charlie Chaplin's Ex-Valet Trains With Combat Team

CAMP SHELBY, Miss.—Charlie Chaplin's former valet is shouldering arms with the Japanese American Combat Team in training here.

Pvt. Richard I. Yahiro worked for the comedian four and a half years before the evacuation of persons of Japanese ancestry from the Pacific Coast forced him out of the Beverly Hills mansion. Twelve months afterward he volunteered for the Combat Team from the Jerome Relocation Center in Arkansas. Down here in the midsummer heat of Mississippi, Pvt. Yahiro remembers the air-conditioning and luxury of Chaplin's show-place home, but, things being what they are, he'd rather valet an anti-tank gun than lay out tweeds and monitor morning baths for a Hollywood mogul.

Born in Hawaii 36 years ago, Yahiro came to the mainland in 1925 to study at the University of Southern California. When his funds ran low, he dropped out of college and began a Jack-of-all-trades career which finally ended in his being the butler for the famed pantomimist.

Chaplin called his butler Dick and treated him almost as a member of the family. As a intimate of the household, Yahiro saw practically all of the famous personalities of the screen, relaxed and at ease in Chaplin's home. And most of them were regular fellows and girls, contrary to the popular view of Hollywoodians, according to Pvt. Yahiro.

As for Chaplin, Yahiro recalls, the great comedian was a serious-minded person in private life, generous and warm-hearted. Instead of playing jokes Chaplin more often was the butt of pranksters who were among his frequent house guests.

As a master of pantomime, Chaplin frequently resorted to his droll gesticulations and artful expressions to express even the most ordinary of his thoughts or instructions to his valet. Sometimes Yahiro couldn't keep his mind on what Chaplin was telling him as he watched the comedian silently enact what he wanted done. All in all, Pvt. Yahiro couldn't imagine a more diverting job—four years in a ringside seat before the on and off-stage antics of perhaps the screen's greatest comedian.

News of Nisei Girl's Induction Error, Says Letter

OGDEN, Utah — A report that Mary Arakawa, a Japanese American girl of Casper, Wyo., had been enrolled in the Women's Army Corps was in error, according to a letter to Mrs. J. G. Falck of Ogden from the office of the director of the WACs in Washington.

The letter followed an inquiry by Mrs. Falck, an adviser of the Ogden, Utah, chapter of the JACL.

"We have checked with the Commanding General of the Seventh Service command regarding the clipping which you inclosed in your letter. Miss Arakawa, the nisei girl referred to in the clipping, has not been enrolled and the news release was in error," the letter declared.

The letter noted, however, that enlistments for women citizens of Japanese ancestry would be accepted in the near future.
