Reveal Gen. Marshall's Support of Nisei

Mike Masaoka Reviews Nisei Problems in Conference With White House Representative

WASHINGTON—David K. Niles, administrative assistant to the President, and Philo Nash, special assistant, met with Mike Masaoka, executive secretary of the JACL Anti-Discrimination Committee, on Jan. 23 to discuss the problems of persons of Japanese ancestry in the United States.

Masaoka called to the attention of the White House to some of the major civil disabilities suffered by both the Issei and the Nisei.

He pointed out that because Japanese nationals are ineligible for citizenship both the alien and the citizen is handicapped. In some 12 states, Japanese aliens are prohibited from owning land and his citizen children's titles to real property are in jeopardy.

Japanese aliens are barred from engaging in some 93 different fields of occupation and employment in the United States and certain licenses to do business are denied them in various western localities. Some local labor unions and specialist fields use the fact that the Japanese are racially ineligible to citizenship against the native-born citizen, Masaoka charged.

"The unprecedented loyalty of the entire Japanese population in spite of the unique and great sacrifices which they were called upon to bear in World War II entitles them to fair treatment and equal opportunities," the ADC official declared.

In discussing the evacuation claims bill, Masaoka said that he had been instructed to request a more liberal measure than the one sponsored by the WRA and the Interior Department last session. He suggested an automatic lump sum payment for every evacuee, with the provision that the regular court of claims be opened for greater losses of a "demonstrable nature" than the stipulated lump sum. Such liberalization, Masaoka said, would save both the evacuees and the government a lot of time and money.

The problem of Japanese nationals who are now subject for deportation was also mentioned. A plea that appropriate legislation be introduced and passed by this Congress to prevent the deportation of Japanese aliens who served in the war effort of the United States, of those whose deportation would result in serious hardship to American citizens, and of those in the so-called "treaty merchant" classes was entered by the ADC representative.

Special problems created by such situations as those in which Nisei veterans marry Canadian-born Japanese were also discussed with the White House staff members.

Both Niles and Nash expressed great interest and concern for the problems posed, especially those which had to do with civil rights. They pointed out that President Truman, too, was concerned with such problems and that his recent order creating the Civil Rights Committee was ample evidence of his interest in such matters.

Mr. Niles declared that since this new presidential committee was interested in civil rights and their strengthening through proper legislation it would be wise for the Japanese Americans to present their problems to them, together with their suggested corrections. The presidential assistant thought that the JACL and its Anti-Discrimination Committee could render a real service to all concerned by cooperating with the Civil Rights Committee.

The White House executives asked that they be kept informed as to the latest developments in Japanese American problems and as to how they might be of service.

Forecast Early Closing of Hostels

Nisei Veteran Elected Commander Of Legion Post

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The national headquarters of the American Legion announced here this week that an American war veteran of Japanese ancestry, Saijo Hirotsu, has been elected post commander of Hilo Post No. 3 of the American Legion in Hilo, Hawaii.

It was noted that Hirotsu is the first Japanese American to serve as commander of the post. The Legion said that among the members of Hilo Post 3 are many Japanese Americans "who served in the famous 442nd Combat Team and the 100th Infantry in Italy in World War II."

Membership in Post 3 consists of war veterans of all racial groups.

Kushida Named JACL Chief in Midwest Region

New Regional Official Served During War On Staff of WRA

The appointment of Tatsuo Kushida of Chicago as midwest regional director of the Japanese American Citizens League was announced this week by Hito Okada, national president.

Kushida will take over his duties on February 1 in the Chicago JACL office at 189 West Madison street, Room 1008.

He replaces Masao Satow, who was last month named acting national secretary of the league.

Kushida was an employee of the War Relocation Authority during the war, serving in Kansas City and Chicago. His work was centered around public relations and employer contacts on behalf of persons of Japanese ancestry.

He is a graduate of the University of California. He has a B. S. in commerce.

One of his first duties as head of the midwest region will be to set up a midwest district council in the spring. The council will be the first east of the intermountain area.

Eastern Oregon GI Dies of Illness In Japan Hospital

ONTARIO, Ore.—T/4 Paul Hashimoto, son of Mr. and Mrs. Masao Hashimoto of Ontario, died in Japan on Jan. 11 from acute encephalitis, according to information received from the War Department.

The Nisei soldier is survived by his parents and two brothers, Yukio and Kenji.

He attended Ontario high school and the First Methodist church and the Japanese Methodist church in Ontario. It is expected that his body will be returned to Ontario from Japan.

The Army report noted that Sgt. Hashimoto had been seriously ill since Jan. 1.

Disclose Secretary of State's Wartime Action to Restore Citizen Rights to Group

War Department General Staff Member Says Gen. Marshall Took Responsibility For Reopening of Army Service to Nisei

General George C. Marshall, Secretary of State, was revealed this week as the man in the government who took the first step in wartime to restore to Americans of Japanese ancestry the citizen rights which were restricted by Army action after the outbreak of war.

The disclosure was made this week in a special article for the North American News Alliance by S. L. A. Marshall, a member of the War Department's general staff during the war.

According to S. L. A. Marshall, "it was perfectly clear that had General Marshall (then Army Chief of Staff) failed to take the initial step toward restoring full rights and justice, the war would have ended without anything constructive being done for the Nisei or to uphold the freedoms represented by their cause."

Mr. Marshall declared that General Marshall took full personal responsibility for the change in government policy which resulted in reopening of military service to Japanese Americans and supported the decision to use the 100th Infantry Battalion of Japanese Americans as combat troops and not as a labor battalion.

The article noted that a historian, H. A. DeWeerd, had noted that General Marshall had "badly judged" persons of Japanese ancestry and the real danger to the Pacific coast after the outbreak of war. Consequently, General Marshall supported Lieut. Gen. John L. Dewitt's decision to evacuate American citizens of Japanese ancestry from the Pacific coast to war relocation centers.

Mr. Marshall noted that "it is unfortunate" that DeWeerd, knowing of General Marshall's decision on evacuation, "was not familiar with the rest of the story."

"Nothing has ever been said to set right the relation of the Chief of Staff to this (Nisei) problem."

Mr. Marshall said that the story of General George Marshall and the Nisei was worth reporting "now that the question of his military contribution to our history is of less consequence than his character in regard to institutions of democratic freedom."

Mr. Marshall declared that the view was "unqualifiedly false" that the Army's evacuation policy was applied with "brass-hat arrogance."

"If initially the Army made an error on the side of caution—thereby doing serious injustice to 100,000 worthwhile Americans—at least it should be added that the Army, at General Marshall's instigation took the courageous stand which rectified the error. In so doing the Army got very little moral support from civilians in the government."

"Let us agree that the De Witt policy was precipitated and unwarranted," the former War Department general staff official declared. "Certainly he was not the only American who was thrown off balance by the news of Pearl Harbor, nor was this the first time the constitutional rights of some American citizens were suspended during wartime."

"At that hour there were few Americans willing to give a break to fellow citizens of Japanese blood. The universal feeling was, if not of active hate, at least of general mistrust."

"That feeling continued while the Nisei and their parents were being rounded up. Not one political leader took a chance of offending public opinion—particularly of an inflamed West Coast—by challenging the evacuation."

"After they were placed in the centers, there was no protest from the public or their spokesman. That the usefulness of one per cent of our population was being destroyed seemed to matter not at all."

Mr. Marshall declared that "in retrospect, one can say confidently that there is not the slightest reason to believe the steps would have been retraced while the war was still on, had not someone in high authority taken a clear view of the situation and assumed personal responsibility for the change."

The decision on the government's treatment of the Nisei was made by the chief of staff, General Marshall, according to the article.

"There was then in Hawaii a National Guard unit of Nisei—the 100th Battalion," Mr. Marshall recalled. "Hawaiian public opinion wanted this unit made into a labor group—a degrading step."

"Another Army 'brass hat,' Col. Kendall J. Fielder, G-2 of the Islands, opposed this idea as un-American and unworthy. He said these men were fit and loyal combat troops and that they deserved every confidence. General Marshall happened to be on a Pacific trip at the time. He gave his complete approval and the battalion was sent to Europe to gain fame as the Purple Heart Battalion."

"That was the beginning of the upturn. A small group of Army general staff officers, who had been concerned over the policy of evacuation and its ultimate effect on our traditions and constitutional liberties, drew courage from this example."

"Work had proceeded for some time on a plan to draft relocation center Nisei into Army combat service, not because the Army was hard put for manpower, but because it was believed this would be the most dramatic way to prove the loyalty of the Japanese American population, and to win national approval for reestablishing these people in the American community."

"It became my task," S. L. A. Marshall added, "to write the policy, and to clarify the related administrative questions governing the responsibility of the Army and the War Relocation Authority in the general enterprise. The policy cleared the general staff and was approved by the White House exactly as written."

"The latter point has importance for two reasons," according to Mr. Marshall. "The story is still circulated that the policy was choked down the throat of the Army by the government, whereas the reverse is more nearly true. Further, it is of record that the Army remained steadfast to all of its commitments."

"The Nisei, given opportunity, went on to prove in a dramatic way their patriotic loyalty."

"Looking at it all from where I sat, it was perfectly clear that had General Marshall failed to take the initial step toward restoring full rights and justice, the war would have ended without anything constructive being done for the Nisei or to uphold the freedoms represented by their cause."

Colorado Gets Bill for Alien Fishing Rights

Would Eliminate Discrimination Against Japanese Residents

DENVER—A bill providing for an alien resident fishing license under which Japanese alien residents of Colorado will be able to fish within the state was introduced in the Colorado state assembly by Senator Arthur Brooks Jr. (R., Denver), on January 16.

The bill was prepared by the Tri-State JACL office in consultation with the Denver Unity Council.

Under a ruling handed down by Attorney General Lawrence Hinkley in April, 1946, Colorado aliens of Japanese ancestry are prohibited from fishing within the state.

His ruling was based upon the following: Under the criminal code of the state, Japanese aliens are prohibited from possessing a gun and from hunting game. The Colorado Game and Fish commission is authorized by statute to issue only combined small game and fishing licenses. Since, in order to fish, a Japanese alien would have to purchase a combined game and fish license, and he is prohibited from hunting, he cannot be issued a license.

Under the state law, however, non-resident aliens of Japanese ancestry can apply for and receive fishing licenses, but resident aliens cannot.

Senator Brooks' bill would provide for separate fishing licenses for alien residents of the state. The bill provides for a $5 license fee.

Two Persons Hurt In Flash Fire in Denver Watch Shop

DENVER, Colo.—Two persons of Japanese ancestry were injured on Jan. 16 in a flash fire which destroyed valuable watch repairing and dental equipment in two fourth-floor offices in the Mack building.

K. G. Yama, 64, and George Shibata, 26, received severe hand burns when benzine Yama was pouring into a watch cleaning machine spilled on electric wiring and was ignited.

Fire department officials said that the flames spread rapidly to an adjoining office of a dentist. Damage to the building was estimated at $900.

California Personnel Board Restores 39 Nisei to Jobs

SACRAMENTO, Calif.—The California State Personnel Board this week restored jobs to 39 Japanese Americans who were evacuated from California during the war.

The employees were on the payrolls of eleven state departments in Sacramento and San Francisco. In addition, the board agreed to pay them an aggregate of approximately $4500 for loss of salary between the time of their suspension and the time they were evacuated.

More than 500 Japanese Americans were employed by state civil service at the time of the outbreak of the war. More than 400 resigned under pressure from state employment, but approximately 100 refused to do so. Those in the latter group were suspended on blanket charges of "disloyalty."

In recent hearings the state has withdrawn the "disloyalty" charges and all but four of the employees who were suspended have been reinstated with civil service rights unimpaired.

Slayer of Nisei War Veteran Changes Plea to Guilty; Gets Sentence of Life Imprisonment

LeRoy Bob, Convicted of Brutal Murder of Wounded 442nd Infantry Veteran, Was Saved From Gas Chamber by Action of State Court

STOCKTON, Calif.—Saved from death in the state's gas chamber by the action of the California State Supreme Court, LeRoy Bob, 22, convicted in the brutal murder of George Yoshioka, wounded veteran of the 442nd Combat Team, in November, 1945, changed his not guilty plea to guilty on Jan. 17 and was sentenced to life imprisonment by Superior Judge Raymond M. Dunne.

Bob was found guilty of the murder of Yoshioka, a native of San Jose who was visiting in Stockton, and originally was sentenced to death. The State Supreme Court reversed the local conviction and ordered a new trial for Bob when they overruled a decision of Judge Dunne which allowed as evidence a statement of S. J. Johnson, 23, Bob's accomplice who already is serving life sentence after a jury found him guilty of the same crime and recommended life imprisonment. In his statement Johnson had accused Bob of wielding the death weapon which Bob denied.

Yoshioka was robbed and bludgeoned to death by Johnson and Bob who fled from California and were apprehended in Texas. The Nisei veteran's wallet, watch and other belongings were found on the pair at the time of their arrest.

Yoshioka served with the 442nd Infantry in Italy and France and was seriously wounded during the Japanese American Combat Team's rescue of the "lost battalion" of the 36th Division.

Two Returnees Victimized in Daylight Robberies

SAN FRANCISCO—Masayoshi Ashizawa, proprietor of the Soko Hardware store, was painfully injured when he was attacked and severely beaten by three men on Jan. 21.

Posing as customers, the trio entered the store and asked to see some knives. One of the men struck Ashizawa over the head with a paper-wrapped bar or pipe when he turned his back to them to reach for the merchandise.

The three men fled after grabbing $20 from the cash register. Kusujiro Nobusada, who was passing by, saw the men run out and entered the store to find Ashizawa injured. Nobusada called Dr. Keiji Kitagawa, who had been held up 30 minutes before by two other bandits.

Dr. Kitagawa reported that the robbers threatened him with a knife and took a dozen tablets of morphine and other drugs from his handbag.

Rev. Kitagawa Will Speak in Program At Minneapolis Church

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — The Rev. Daisuke Kitagawa of Minneapolis was selected by the Minneapolis Urban League to speak at St. Mark's Cathedral on Sunday, February 16.

The program will include a musical service presented by a combined Negro choir and the Twin Cities Symphonic Chorus.

This program is one of a series sponsored as a community service each Sunday afternoon by the inter-racial committee of the Urban League.

The Rev. Kitagawa, coordinator of Nisei church activities in the Twin Cities, will be the first person of Japanese extraction to be featured on such a program.

The installation services for the officers of the United Citizens League, chapter of the National JACL, were also sponsored under the auspices of this committee. George Grim, Minneapolis Morning Tribune columnist, and radio commentator, spoke on the topic, "Let's Be Intelligent." Uta Shimotsuka, student at Macalester College, was the vocal soloist.

The Institute also participated in many projects with other organizations, including the Council for Civic Unity, the JACL, the YWCA, YMCA and other groups.

In regard to employment the Institute's year-end report made the following recommendations as services needed: continued counseling; compiling of information for a general file of individuals looking for improved jobs and opportunities to offer them; consultations with the personnel manager's association; work with the labor unions' anti-discrimination league; the need to make clear to Japanese Americans to continue to seek work in keeping with their highest skill, thus serving to offset the "devastation of discouragement" which is growing.

Portland Drops Wartime Ban on Issei Business

City Authorities Rescind Restriction On "Enemy Aliens"

PORTLAND, Ore. — The city council has rescinded its wartime policy of denying business licenses to aliens of Japanese ancestry, it was reported here last week.

The decision of city authorities to issue business licenses to alien Japanese on application was indicated at a recent informal conference.

The ban against alien Japanese business was instituted shortly after Pearl Harbor. Although directed against all "enemy aliens," it was indicated that it was enforced only against Japanese aliens.

Liberal groups in Portland have been campaigning for the removal of the ban against the Japanese aliens, noting that Portland was the only major city on the West Coast to take such action.

Proof of citizenship was required from Americans of Japanese ancestry who applied for business licenses.

Representatives of the Portland chapter of the JACL met with city officials to urge the removal of the restriction.

State of California Accepts Settlement to Quiet Titles In Five Fresno Escheat Cases

FRESNO, Calif.—The state of California last week accepted settlements in five escheat cases involving persons of Japanese ancestry who had been charged with violation of the Alien Land law which prohibits land ownership by aliens of Japanese ancestry and other aliens "ineligible to citizenship."

In the settlements the state accepted $68,415 and quieted the titles to the farm properties involved in the names of American citizen children of the Japanese aliens who had been charged with acquiring an interest in the farms in violation of the Alien Land law.

News of the settlements was announced by Superior Judge Dan F. Conway as he stipulated the judgments.

The largest settlement came in two suits against Takei and Natsuye Iwamura and their children and amounted to $29,625, covering title to 100 acres of rich farming land in the Selma-Sanger area.

Under terms agreed upon, title to one parcel of 60 acres was quieted in the name of Akira Iwamura, U. S. Army veteran who was overseas when the state instituted legal action to confiscate his farm property on the ground that his parents maintained an interest in the property. The remaining 40 acres was vested in the name of Mary Iwamura-Abe, daughter of the couple.

In another proceeding, the state compromised its suit against Tamigoro and Chisato Chiamori and their children upon payment of $24,502.50 and quieted the title to 62 acres of Fresno County agricultural property in the Reedley-Parlier area. The title to more than 40 acres was given to Yosushi Chiamori while Akira Chiamori, another son, and his wife, Toyoko, were given the title to 26 acres.

In settlement of a fourth suit brought by the state for alleged lien land law violations, Hanako Ishii Teraoka received the land rights on a 40 acre farm in the Reedley district from Keiji and Mary Nakashima.

The fifth suit involved the payment of $3,887.50 to quiet title to land in the Reedley area in the name of Fumiko Helen Akahori, daughter of Mitsuo and Umeji Akahori, defendants in the state's suit.

UC Group Asks New Coach Be Free From Racial Bias

BERKELEY, Calif. — Recalling the "fine contributions" made to University of California athletic teams by Ted Ohashi, George Fong, Walter Gordon, Achie Williams and other non-Caucasian athletes, the student cabinet of the University YMCA on Jan. 21 requested that "freedom from racial bias" be one of the qualifications required of the new football coach to be appointed by the University of California at Berkeley.

The student YMCA leaders also urged that no institution whose racial policies might prove detrimental or embarrassing to any individual connected with competing California teams be included on UC athletic schedules.

Ohashi was a star on Golden Bear varsity basketball teams in the early 1930s.

He is now connected with the YMCA in St. Louis.

Los Angeles Housing Meeting Calls for Protection Of Nisei Right in Land Law

One Hundred Organizations Represented by Delegates Who Passed Resolution Unanimously; Amendment of Present Law to Be Requested

LOS ANGELES—Over one thousand delegates to the Los Angeles Citizens' Housing Council action conference on housing on January 18 asked that the California alien land act be amended to keep inviolate all property titles held by citizen children, veterans or citizen wives of Japanese ancestry.

The delegates, who passed the resolution by unanimous vote, represented 100 organizations.

The resolution was recommended by the conference's panel discussion group on housing problems of the minority groups.

Farnk Chuman, newly-elected president of the Los Angeles JACL, and Saburo Kido, past national president, represented the JACL.

In speaking on behalf of the resolution, Chuman pointed out that in addition to the problems of shortages and restrictive covenants, Japanese Americans were doubly handicapped by the alien land act.

Chuman pointed out that many Nisei were fearful of buying homes because of the possibility of later escheat action by the state. He also stated that title insurance companies were reportedly refusing to issue policies where alien Japanese parents provided the money for the purchase of a home.

The case of Nisei wives of alien Japanese was also presented by Chuman. Escheat proceedings have reportedly started in cases where in community funds were used to purchase the real property and the alien husband lived with his citizen wife and children and helped to cultivate or manage the property, he said.

The resolution, which was introduced by Dan Marshall of the Catholic Interracial Council, reads as follows:

"Resolved that the Alien Land Law be amended so that the title or any interest in real property recorded in the name of citizen children or veterans or citizen wives of aliens ineligible to citizenship shall be inviolate."

The delegates were reported to be strongly moved when it was stated that real property owned by citizens of Japanese ancestry for periods of ten years and longer were under attack in escheat proceedings brought by the state.

The resolution, if passed as an amendment, would nullify the presumptions of evasion of the law, as stated in Section 9 of the act, in case the consideration is paid by an alien ineligible to citizenship even in cases where the purchase is made for citizen children or veterans of citizen wives of these ineligible aliens.

The conference on housing also asked for the support of any legislative bill whereby racial restrictive covenants would be declared null and void and denied enforcement in the courts.

The council approved the use of anti-racial restrictive covenants.

It also went on record asking that all housing involving the use of state funds or credits be "free from discrimination of segregation on account of race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry." The council further asked that should the state legislature fail to pass such a provision, the provision should be sought through local ordinance or as administrative policy.

This conference was sponsored by the Los Angeles Citizens' Housing Council.

Repeal of Alien Land Statutes Asked in Utah Legislature

Officials Puzzled Over Birthplace Of Nisei Baby

ROCKY FORD, Colo.—County officials this week were stumped in figuring out how to make out the birth certificate of young Henry Nakamura, born on Jan. 14, 1947.

No one seeks to know whether young Henry was born in Otero county or Crowley county.

The baby made his entrance in the automobile of the Nakamuras while the father was rushing the mother to the hospital. The birth took place, the parents recalled, in the vicinity of a bridge over the Arkansas river that divides the two counties.

But they can't remember on which side of the bridge the baby was born.

Pfc. Inouye was buried with honors on Jan. 21 in Sawtelle Soldiers Cemetery after a military funeral.

Membership Leaflet To Be Distributed

Ten thousand copies of a new membership leaflet, "You Bet I'm Joining JACL," will be distributed late this month by the national offices of the organization to its local chapters.

The leaflet was written by Mas Satow, acting national secretary, for use in conjunction with the JACL membership drive, which will be held February 15 to March 15.

Two chapters, the Salt Lake City and the San Diego chapters, have gotten off to an early start in their recruiting, Satow said. San Diego has already reported a total of 102 members for the year. The Salt Lake City group began its drive on January 20. It will end February 20.

Blind Author Completes Work On English-Japanese Dictionary

A dream of many years' standing will soon come true for Tokinobu Mihara, blind educator and author now in Salt Lake City, with the publication in February of an English-Japanese dictionary written entirely in English letters.

The dictionary, first of its kind ever to be published, is the result of the author's life-long campaign for the adoption of Roman letters (Romaji) in the writing of Japanese.

Although almost totally blind for many years, Mihara is also the author and publisher of textbooks on the Japanese language.

Work on his new dictionary began in 1944, while Mihara was at the Heart Mountain relocation center in Wyoming. He was assisted by a staff of Nisei workers who, he says, were his "eyes and hands." The work was completed in May, 1946, and publication will be within the month.

Prior to the evacuation, Mihara was city editor and later managing editor of the New World Sun, San Francisco bilingual newspaper. In 1944 he moved to Salt Lake City, where he opened his present store, the Oriental Culture Book Publishing Company, 74 South West Temple.

He is also the inventor of a new system of braille for the future education of the blind in Japan. The system is based upon the use of Romaji in order to correspond to English braille.

Veterans Groups Support Bill To Remove Ban as Tribute to Japanese American Soldiers

The Utah State Legislature was asked this week to repeal the 1943 Alien Land law as a tribute to American soldiers of Japanese ancestry who fought brilliantly in the European and Pacific war theaters.

The Alien Land law repeal measure was included in a group of veterans legislation submitted to the Utah Senate on Jan. 21 with the backing of the Joint Veterans Legislative Council, representing the Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, the Amvets, and the Spanish American War Veterans.

Aged Man Leaves Suicide Note; Body Sought in River

BAKERSFIELD, Calif.—The body of Hatsumi Yoshida, 70, who is believed to have leaped into the swirling waters of the Kern river, 13 miles northeast of here, was being sought by deputy sheriffs this week.

The officers reported they found a note written in Japanese and signed by Yoshida, which said he was "tired of living."

The note was attached to Yoshida's bunk at the Boy Scout camp where he had been working. Yoshida's coat was found on the bank of the river not far from the camp.

The officers said Yoshida worked for the DiGiorgio Farms before being evacuated to a relocation center. After his return to the county he was given work at the Scout camp by the county welfare department.

He had no known relatives.

KALL Radio Program Discusses Labor And Minorities

The question of labor and minorities was discussed Tuesday, January 21, over Station KALL in Salt Lake City in a forum program presented by the NAACP, the JACL and the Council for Civic Unity.

Speakers were Larry Tajiri, editor of the Pacific Citizen; Elmer R. Smith, assistant professor in anthropology at the University of Utah; and Abner Howell, president of the Salt Lake City chapter of the NAACP.

Dr. Aubrey E. Haan, principal of the Stewart Training school, was moderator.

Two Los Angeles Girls End Trip Started in Fall of 1941

War Aftermath Told by Sisters On Return Home

LOS ANGELES—It really was the "Long Voyage Home" for two Nisei girls, Shizuye and Kikuye Hashimoto, who returned to their home in Los Angeles last week after a trip from Japan which began in November, 1941.

The two girls, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Hashimoto of Los Angeles, had much to talk about after their return home, according to Takeshi Shindo, who interviewed them for the Rafu Shimpo.

Kikuye, the younger sister, went to Japan in August, 1937, to attend school.

Four years later Shizuye was sent by her family to bring Kikuye home. The Nisei sisters left Yokohama on the Kamakura Maru in late November of 1941, expecting to be back in the states within two weeks. On the day before Pearl Harbor the boat neared Hawaii, but was forced to return to Japan with the outbreak of the war.

Back in Japan, Shizuye, who graduated from Belmont high school in Los Angeles in 1941, attended the Saint Luke hospital in Tokyo, majoring in nursing. Later she worked for the French Embassy until she was forced to evacuate to Hiroshima with the devastating bombing of Tokyo.

"I was pretty lucky to escape the Tokyo bombing," she said, but she had more to tell.

On the night of August 5, about 12 hours before the atom bomb split Hiroshima, Shizuye received an appointment by the Embassy to work "on the outskirts of Hiroshima." She talked to her roommate, Chizu, who formerly had worked as secretary in the San Pedro firm building in Los Angeles.

"Chizu didn't want to go," Shizuye related. "She said she wanted to stay in Hiroshima city for awhile."

"I left Hiroshima for my new assignment. You know what happened next."

Asked about the Nisei in Japan, both praised the work of the Japanese American GIs.

"The Nisei, both in uniform and civilian life, are doing wonderfully," they said. "Most of them are really homesick. The GIs are anxious about returning to the states to take advantage of their GI Bill of Rights."

"The moral standards of Nisei are high. They are industrious and work very hard."

Prices of food in Japan are terrible, the girls said. Apples and oranges, when available, are 20 yen apiece. Most of the people live on rations, which allow one bowl of rice per meal, and parents with children generally skip one meal a day to provide their children with school lunches.

Not only did the girls survive the war tragedies of Japan, they sidestepped tragedy in San Francisco when they took an earlier train returning to Los Angeles.

Anxious to get home, they chose the streamliner instead of the Southern Pacific Owl, which was derailed at Lerdo, killing seven and injuring 94.

"Well, we're safely home," they said. "As to plans, we don't know yet. First we want to enjoy this beautiful weather."

Marshall and Nisei

The story of General George C. Marshall and the Nisei is a testimonial to the man who is now America's Secretary of State. According to S. L. A. Marshall who served on the War Department's general staff during the war, General George Marshall as Chief of Staff was personally responsible for the dramatic change in U. S. government policy toward the Nisei which resulted in the restoration of full civil rights to members of a group who had been evacuated and interned on the basis of race.

Mr. Marshall's disclosure of Gen. Marshall's relationship to the Nisei has been prompted by the comment of a contemporary historian, H. A. DeWeerd, that Gen. Marshall had "badly judged" persons of Japanese ancestry and the real danger to the West Coast after the outbreak of war and had supported Lieut. Gen. John L. DeWitt's decision for mass evacuation. Mr. Marshall's interest in revealing what he knows of the background of inner War Department activity on the Nisei question is inspired by his realization that because of Gen. Marshall's appointment as the chief foreign policy officer of the United States government "the question of his military contribution to our history is of less consequence than his character in regard to institutions of democratic freedom."

It is not that any evidence is necessary to establish Gen. Marshall's democratic integrity. There has been more than ample evidence of Gen. Marshall's deep regard for democratic functions in his record as Chief of Staff and, more recently, in his efforts to avert a ruinous civil war in China. It is notable that Gen. Marshall, in his recent report on his China mission, deplored the dominance of the military clique in the Kuomintang government and showed a concern for the extension of democratic principles which is uncommon in the professional soldier. The facts on Gen. Marshall and the Nisei round out the record and prove Gen. Marshall to be an individual with deep democratic convictions.

Mr. S. L. A. Marshall, however, is somewhat harsh on civilians in the administration in his claim that General Marshall and the Army were solely responsible for the restoration of civil rights to the Nisei, a policy which included the decision to reopen selective service to Japanese Americans and to organize a special combat unit which could and did prove, in dramatic fashion, the loyalty of members of the group. It will not diminish Gen. Marshall's record as a democrat to note that there were a considerable number of civilians, in and out of the government, who also worked against strenuous opposition to change the government's policy toward the Nisei. John J. McCloy, then Assistant Secretary of war, Dillon S. Myer, Harold L. Ickes and Eleanor Roosevelt were among many who helped influence the shaping of a policy on the Nisei which was consistent with American declarations of democracy. These persons, together with various private citizens and organizations, including the JACL, worked for the elimination of government restrictions against Japanese Americans.

The final decision on the reopening of military service for Japanese Americans, which was the crux of the government's Nisei problem, was made by Gen. Marshall as Chief of Staff but it would be rewriting history to declare that the Army alone was responsible for that change in policy.

Mr. Marshall notes that "a small group of Army general staff officers" were deeply concerned over the implications of the Army's mass evacuation of persons of Japanese ancestry from the West Coast in 1942 "and its ultimate effect on our traditions and constitutional liberties." This group, Mr. Marshall notes, drew courage from Gen. Marshall's backing of the rights of Japanese Americans. The Army, which had evacuated the Nisei, later took forthright action to combat racist antagonism against the evacuees on the Pacific coast and its efforts played an integral part in the successful return of the evacuees.

Gen. Marshall played an important role in the formation of Japanese American combat units "as the most dramatic way to prove the loyalty of the Japanese American population" and his pride in the combat records of the 442nd Combat Team and the 100th Infantry Battalion is shown by the fact that these two Nisei outfits are the only two military units smaller than a division which are given specific mention in his official review of World War II.

Gen. Marshall and the Army made an initial mistake in their appraisal of the loyalty potential of the Japanese American population but the later record of the Chief of Staff and of the War Department in its relationship with Japanese Americans is one of which all Americans may be proud.

Action for Legislators

Action to repeal certain wartime measures which were passed in the heat of anti-Japanese activity was begun this week in the state legislatures of Colorado and Utah.

In Utah a bill to outlaw the state's alien land act was proposed by a group of senators acting on behalf of war veterans of the state. The law, which was never so vicious in intent nor so vindictively enforced as in California, was described as a "wartime" measure which was inherently unjust to the innocent parents of loyal Japanese American soldiers.

In Colorado State Senator Arthur Brooks, Jr., has asked the legislators to correct a patently unjust situation concerning aliens of Japanese ancestry. Japanese nationals, if they are residents of Colorado, cannot fish within the state, in accordance with a decision which was handed down in 1946: Colorado fishing licenses are issued jointly with hunting licenses. Japanese aliens are not allowed to possess guns or hunt. Therefore they cannot obtain licenses to hunt or to fish. Residents from out-of-state, however, though they be Japanese aliens, can obtain licenses for fishing purposes. Under Arthur Brooks' proposal, a new provision in the state's hunting and fishing code would make provision for an alien fishing license.

The reasoning whereby Japanese aliens in Colorado cannot fish is one of those absurdities into which the courts fall when faced with interpretation of a law that is based upon a false assumption of race.

Predicament in Canada

The present predicament of Canadians of Japanese ancestry is of particular concern and interest to Japanese Americans because the Canadian situation has resulted from the same racist pressures exerted against the Nisei on the Pacific coast. In British Columbia the white supremacists, whose scapegoat long have been the residents of Japanese ancestry, have succeeded to a far greater degree than their racist brethren in the United States. Japanese Canadians still are totally excluded from the coastal area of British Columbia where more than 90 per cent resided before the evacuation in 1942. Under a program advocated by British Columbia politicians the Canadian government now is committed to a policy of dispersal of the Japanese Canadian group. Under varying degrees of compulsion, the Japanese Canadians have been forced to choose between relocation in eastern Canada and deportation to Japan.

The Canadian government's policy on its residents of Japanese ancestry has been heavily influenced by British Columbia's racist politicians, one of whom, Ian Mackenzie who campaigned on the platform of "No Japs from the Rockies to the sea" is the Minister of Veterans Affairs in Prime Minister King's cabinet. In recent months, however, more and more Canadians have become alarmed regarding the treatment accorded the Japanese Canadians and this concern is reflected in the Canadian press. Typical of recent editorial comment is an editorial in the Toronto Star titled "White Supremacy in Canada" which declared: "The honor and value of Canadian citizenship will remain marred unless the government rectifies its policies governing Japanese Canadians."

It is believed that the government's treatment of Japanese Canadians will be a major issue in the forthcoming session of Parliament.

Labor and the Minorities

The present-day attitude of most trade unions toward Japanese Americans and other minority group workers, particularly in the western United States, is in sharp contrast to the attitude which prevailed among organized workers in past generations.

Organized labor, which has affirmed the right of Nisei to membership and a job in the CIO Stockton incident and the AFL Miyama affair in San Francisco in 1945, once played racist, anti-Oriental politics on the West Coast. This, of course, was long before the emergence of the CIO with its forthright non-discrimination policy in the middle 30s.

Some of the earliest instances of violence against workers of Japanese ancestry on the Pacific coast, which occurred in 1890 and 1892, were instigated by organized shoemakers and cooks and waiters against immigrant Japanese entering those fields. Today the AFL culinary workers accord full participation to Japanese and other Oriental Americans and some local leadership of the union, particularly in Hawaii, is made up of men of Japanese descent.

Labor's new leadership, symbolized by the men of the CIO and the AFL federal unions, place especial stress on the consolidation of minority group workers among the rank and file and this policy has been rewarded by the fact that it has strengthened the labor movement as a whole. On the other hand, some of labor's Old Guard, characterized by C. J. Haggerty, past president of the California State Federation of Labor, and by the goon squads of Dave Beck, boss of western teamsters, maintain an attitude of prejudice which may be considered a defiance of the stated policy of the AFL as a whole. Because of the large degree of autonomy maintained by local AFL unions, there is little possibility or opportunity for disciplinary action against locals on grounds of race discrimination.

Prejudice still exists in most AFL building trades unions on the West Coast, many of which have provisions in their charters excluding non-white workers, and in the Railway Brotherhoods, which have maintained a lily-white policy on membership. On the other hand, it may be noted that the Minneapolis council of AFL construction unions is considering the authorization of stop-work activity on housing projects which limit occupancy on grounds of race or religion.

The most vicious instance of discrimination affecting Japanese Americans is the policy of Dave Beck and his AFL Teamsters in Seattle to prohibit the reopening of Japanese American businesses in the produce, floral, dry cleaning and other fields in which teamsters are involved. A similar policy was attempted by AFL Teamsters in Los Angeles to exclude Japanese Americans from returning to the wholesale produce markets, but was withdrawn by the action of the rank and file membership of the Los Angeles local. The International Teamster, national publication of the union, showed the influence of Dave Beck's anti-Orientalism and carried on a long and sustained campaign during the war years against the return of Japanese Americans to the coast and the resettlement of evacuees in other areas.

In the years before the war Dave Beck attempted to organize Japanese and other Oriental Americans into segregated locals in which the members were permitted to pay dues, but enjoyed none of the privileges of union membership.

Beck's attitude and policy toward Japanese Americans are the exception rather than the rule in the labor movement on the West Coast. With the exception of Old Guard diehards like C. J. Haggerty, the AFL in California, once a member of the Joint Immigration Committee and a participant in anti-Japanese activity, reflects little of its former anti-Orientalism. The Miyama incident in 1945, which involved the right of a returned evacuee worker to membership and a job in San Francisco's municipal railway system, was a clean break with the past. At this time, Jack Shelley, then a state senator and San Francisco's foremost AFL leader, took the lead in affirming Takeo Miyama's right to work. Today Jack Shelley's stand is far more typical of the AFL attitude in California than Dave Beck's racism.

Even in Dave Beck's Seattle most AFL unions long since have buried their animus against workers of Japanese ancestry. The change was noted shortly after World War I, when independent Japanese unions in the city supported the AFL's general strike and the statement of the president of the Seattle Labor Council in 1923 that "Federated Labor had no quarrel with the Japanese" marked one of the first instances in which West Coast labor noted its disapproval of the exclusionist campaign then in progress.

The changed concept of organized labor in its relationship to minority group workers may be seen by the fact that labor today is an outstanding advocate of legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment. The CIO has carried on a campaign of education outside as well as within its membership which has sought to improve race relationships. The CIO United Auto Workers, the world's biggest union, has been notable for its work in this field and maintains an active anti-discrimination committee. It may be recalled that the UAW, shortly after the beginning of the WRA's resettlement program, noted the loyalty record of Japanese Americans and supported the right of evacuees to obtain jobs in the automotive industry. The UAW's action in 1943 proved effective in neutralizing the efforts of a representative of West Coast race-baiters who went into the Detroit area to bestir racist animosity toward Japanese Americans.

One of the outstanding examples of the success of the CIO's non-discrimination policy has been demonstrated in Hawaii in the complete organization of the 28,000 workers in the sugar industry by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union for the first time in history. Previous attempts of sugar industry workers to improve their working and living conditions were frustrated by the fact that they were carried out along racial lines and were able to pit race against race to defeat these efforts. The interracial solidarity of the sugar industry workers in the ILWU, including some 13,000 of Japanese ancestry, is credited with the success of the recent industry-wide strike in which the contract obtained marks the emancipation of the sugar workers from the tight paternalism which has existed on the plantations and in the mills.

There is a pattern for minority group progress in Hawaii's labor history in which a non-segregated union succeeded where racially segregated unions failed.

Skilled trades which once were barred to workers of Oriental ancestry in western states because of the refusal of unions to induct workers of minority race groups are now being opened as discriminatory attitudes lessen. Race myths which once were utilized against workers of Oriental ancestry in "yellow peril" campaigns are being exploded by the consolidation of these workers in the labor movement.

The changed concept of organized labor in its attitude toward minorities is consistent with the role of trade unions today as instruments for social progress.

Wisconsin's Wiley Will Head Senate Judiciary Committee

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Alexander Wiley, Republican, of Wisconsin, was named chairman of the influential Senate Judiciary Committee which will handle most legislative subjects relating to persons of Japanese ancestry in the 80th Congress, the Washington Office of the JACL Anti-Discrimination Committee announced today.

Under the reorganization bill, as in the House of Representatives, the revised Judiciary Committee of the Senate will consider all immigration and naturalization claims and civil liberties matters introduced in the Upper Chambers.

Tomorrow's Heirs

Minneapolis, Minn.

GEORGE GRIM . . .

George Grim spoke to us, as he has been speaking for us via columns in the Minneapolis Morning Tribune. He spoke at the installation service for the officers of the newly organized United Citizens League at St. Mark's Cathedral. It was a wonderful day to begin with, for the sun had melted the January snow on the pavement, and had turned the cold faces of lakes into smiling ripples.

It was even a warmer day inside, for the simple talk of one man wrought that warmth inside of us. He spoke mostly of a Nisei officer from Hawaii named Jito Chinen, who was a sort of an ambassador to the people of Minnesota. Chinen was an extraordinary soldier who was able to lead not only during the wars of war-strewn battle lines, but also the conflicts in men's minds. He was that man, who tired and ill, reenlisted after seeing action with the 442nd so that he could carry a message to Japan to the parents of one of his men. He was the man with the chest full of ribbons, who penned sincere moving letters from Europe and Asia, to the people of Minnesota, who took him into their hearts.

And then Grim spoke of an incident in Italy, where a little Italian lad, who was waving cheer to the victorious American GIs was accidentally killed. He spoke of the sorrow in the hearts of even death-hardened heroes over the loss of one boy whom they had never seen before. They hadn't meant to hurt and they were sorry. Grim compared this incident to the sorrow now felt . . . felt a little too late for the laughing olive-complexioned lads who never came back because of choice and determination to prove that they were with the rest of the Americans. Grim said, "We hadn't meant to hurt; but that does not bring them back. We are sorry now." He said that all of us must never think of Brotherhood Week or installation day, but to integrate into every day the simple, everlasting effort for understanding . . . or else the days themselves become meaningless. There is nothing complicated or complex about simple daily fellowship. Yes, George Grim, a busy man, who seldom accepts speaking engagements, spoke to us because he understood us . . . and believed in us.

IN A NEWS ROOM . . .

There's nothing more messy and comfortable than a newspaper office, or any place being used for publications. The other night, after climbing four flights of stairs at the St. Paul International Institute, I finally reached the door with the impromptu sign reading, "Northwest Nisei Staff Meeting here." Typists were columnizing stories rapidly, having their frivolous heels abandoned on the floor. Pete Ohtaki and Dick Klee-man, the bosses, had their hands full of stuff which resembled copy. Jim Ginguji, the fella who was recently elected secretary of the National Chemical Association at Hamline university, was searching for the green ink pad. I was fascinated at the ease with which Kuwa Yoshida, recording secretary of the United Citizens League, hopped around with only one shoe on. Paul Ide, a photographer, who someday aspires to compile a pictorial study on Nisei, was not too successfully trying to get artistic poses. George Sasaki, ex-S/Sgt. with the Special Services division at Fort Snelling, was immediately put to work retyping news paragraphs, when he was there only on a social visit. George should now be en route to Chicago, where he intends to tackle the unenvied task of earning a civilian living. He's the guy who went around organizing socials for the GIs while they were stationed here.

The Northwest Nisei is now the official organ for the United Citizens League, chapter of the Nat'l JACL. The publication staff itself is significant of the broader realms which this organization covers. Instead of having Caucasian members listed as impersonal sponsors, it puts them to work . . . among us. In this way, we not only know who they are, but we work with them, gripe with them. The language we talk is the same, the topics discussed are common.

This wasn't an extraordinary

Washington News-Letter Los Angeles Relocation Report Notes Marked Changes in Economics of Returnee Group

Few Japanese Americans Have Been Able to Regain Foothold in Wholesale, Retail Produce Fields; Gardening, Textile Work Draw Many Evacuees

By JOHN KITASAKO

We present herewith the first in a series of two articles on the resettlement of evacuees in the Los Angeles area. This piece deals with its economics while next week we shall discuss its progress toward social adjustment. We are deeply indebted to Tom Sasaki who is a member of Bob Cullum's Resettlement Study staff of the Department of the Interior. Tom conducted studies on resettlement in the Los Angeles area from the latter part of July to the end of December last year.

The Japanese population of Los Angeles County has already hit the 25,000 mark, says Tom, and is steadily climbing toward the pre-war figure of 36,000, which was 39 per cent of all persons of Japanese ancestry in California and 29 per cent of the total in America. Approximately 15,000 reside in Los Angeles city, where the pre-Pearl Harbor population was around 23,000.

The outstanding impression one gains from these thousands who have flocked to Los Angeles, observes Tom, is that nearly everybody is terribly busy making money, so busy in fact that he seems to have little time for anything else.

This situation stems from two factors: first, money is plentiful if one is willing to work for it, and second, the high cost of living does not allow for any leisurely living. This mad scramble to earn a living has had a detrimental effect: the pattern of community life is still pretty much a jumble. Organizational development has lagged far behind the growth in population. The young Buddhists were probably the first big group to get established, with around 250 to 300 attending Sunday services.

Marked changes in the economics of Little Tokyo are apparent, says Tom. In big business, which in pre-war days meant the wholesale produce firms, the retail fruit markets, and the flower markets, the Japanese have regained very little of their former holdings. Only in the flower markets have the Japanese obtained what can be called a foothold, but they are finding competition very stiff, as Caucasians who moved in during the absence of the Japanese have built up a substantial business.

The number who have gone back into the wholesale produce business and the retail markets is insignificant, declares Tom. In 1941, Japanese did a $26,000,000 business, handling 75 per cent of the green vegetables in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. In pre-war years, there were about 1000 fruit markets operated by Japanese, employing 5000 people and doing a $25,000,000 business.

The Japanese are trying to get back into these fields, but they are finding it rough, due to the lack of adequate capital and changed methods of marketing and the well-entrenched position of the supermarkets.

The bulk of the Japanese income is now derived from quite different sources. With Los Angeles cursed with one of the tightest housing situations in the country, the hotel and rooming house business ranks No. 1 from the standpoint of yielding high financial returns. Tom figures there are between 150 and 200 Japanese-operated hotels and rooming houses, although other estimates run from 80 to 300. So great is the demand for housing that it is a very common practice for homeowners to convert their homes into rooming houses.

There are instances where as many as 15 persons sleep in one room. Many hotels have four to six persons living in a single room. The number who sleep in barns and garages is high.

Single rooms rent from $30 to $40 without private facilities, and apartments bring in as much as $90 a month. It is not unusual, says Tom, for some families whose members live apart to play $100 a month in rent. For example, those night, but there was something about it, intangible, that made you feel as if it was an important night. It was good to talk of trivia again, to listen to corny jokes. But then, of course, it was held in a facsimile of a publication office.

in hostels pay $30, those in hotels $45, and those living in a trailer camp $24.

The unfortunate aspect is that there is little hope that this abnormal situation will ease up until at least two more years.

Contract gardening ranks second in lucrative pay. Japanese gardeners who returned to Los Angeles early got the cream of garden contracts, which brought them incomes ranging from $600 to $900 a month. But even the latecomers were able to get contracts which yielded $300 to $500. Laborers hired by contract gardeners earn about $1.25 per hour, which runs up to a good sum for those who work 12 to 13 hours a day.

Approximately 3000 Issei and Nisei are engaged in gardening. Around the middle of last year, however, cut-throat practices became evident, says Tom, which in time will cut down appreciably the earnings of gardeners.

One of the outstanding aspects of the post-war economics of Little Tokyo has been the entry of Issei and Nisei women into the booming garment industry. During the war, with California-style sportswear gaining in popularity everywhere, Los Angeles became the sports clothes manufacturing center of the United States.

The women crashed the textile field through the domestic work route, according to Tom. Several domestics employed in the homes of textile makers were given jobs in factories, and that opened the way.

It is estimated that between 2000 and 3000 are engaged in this industry, which is centered on textile row on Los Angeles Street. However, many are employed in the exclusive clothes shops in Beverly Hills, where some establishments have an all-Japanese staff. This type of work proved a natural for Japanese women, for the percentage of them who were adept in sewing from pre-war days is extremely high.

In this connection, it is interesting to note, says Tom, that in the over-all employment picture in Little Tokyo, women have fared better than men in getting the type of job they seek. He thinks this is attributable in part to the fact that women are less inclined to have a chip on their shoulders. Their attitude, generally speaking, seems to have been less affected by the evacuation than that of the men. Secondly, a greater number of the women have the training and background to fit them into specific jobs, whereas the number among men is much lower.

Numerous women have found jobs in civil service and in private firms. There is practically no discrimination in the secretarial field; in fact, the demand for Nisei women is great.

In contrast, the men are finding the situation difficult. Not many have secured good white collar jobs, nor have they landed better-paying factory jobs. Because they are performing hard physical work, many Issei must be content to work as bus boys and dishwashers in restaurants and cafeterias.

Nisei men, about 250, work as record pressers for Columbia, Decca, Capital, Modern and other firms. The single factory employing the most Issei and Nisei is the Moody Mattress Company, which has about 75 on its payroll. This is one of the most liberal outfits in Southern California, employing rehabilitated parolees, blind persons and members of nine cultural groups.

The college-educated have been unable for the most part to get employment because of limited experience and training. The majority of college graduates have established their Denver, Colo. After living in Des Moines almost three years, the closest we got to the famous Iowa state fair was with Dick Haymes and Jeanne Craine in a second run movie house. Thus we hastened in our first year in Denver to the National Western stock show which is to Colorado what the state fair is to Iowa.

We left the stock show properly impressed by feats of horsemanship, fat stock and the prowess of honest-to-goodness cowboys. But more than anything else we were struck by the specialization that has come over the animal kingdom.

Take cattle. Your steaks don't come from the bony-hipped milk cows of childhood memory. They're developed breeds of Herefords, Angus and Shorthorn cattle that are built along the lines of an office desk—short, blocky and stubby legs that barely reach the ground.

They'll yield pounds and pounds of succulent steaks, but they could no more forage off the desert than jump over the moon. The champions were fed so full of corn they could barely waddle into and out of the arena.

If human beings tried similar selective breeding, perhaps some day they could get a strain which would produce men capable of running four-minute miles and nine-second hundred-yard dashes, and girls with the contour of the Petty models.

Vagaries

59th Mission . . .

Ben Kuroki may extend his "59th mission" to a three-month tour of the Deep South under the auspices of the East and West association. Ex-Sgt. Kuroki is now booked for lectures almost every day through February. He hopes to wind up his lecture engagements and may enroll at the University of Nebraska in the fall . . . Robert T. Stripling, who was responsible for much of the anti-Nisei activities of the old Dies Committee as its chief investigator, has been reappointed to the House Un-American Activities committee by its new chairman, J. Parnell Thomas. It may be recalled that Rep. Thomas and Stripling issued fantastic statements regarding the alleged "comforts" enjoyed by Japanese Americans in war relocation centers in 1943 and these statements were widely publicized in a campaign to incite sentiment on the West Coast against the evacuees. The Dies committee's inquisition on Japanese Americans fizzled out, however, and there is no indication of any revival of the investigation by the Thomas committee.

Movie Notes . . .

Hollywood notes: Eddie Imadzu has finished work as art director on a new Van Johnson picture at MGM, "The Romance of Rosie Ritz," and has been loaned by Leo the Lion to an independent studio, where he will work on a new mystery film to be released through 20th Century Fox. Imadzu has been on the MGM rolls for more than 20 years . . . Al Nozaki was recently promoted to the rank of art director at Paramount studio and is now in charge of art direction on a new Paramount musical.

Battle Star . . .

There's one Nisei veteran who did not have an opportunity to serve overseas who still believes he is still entitled to one battle star. He was a member of the military police detachment at the Tule Lake segregation center and saw action in the "battle of Tule Lake" which if you read the new book, "The Spoilage," was no battle at all.

own professional and business offices.

Great changes have come over the wartime Bronzeville. This area, which has as its core the intersection of San Pedro and First Streets, says Tom, has almost completely reverted back to the Japanese. Nearly all shops have been taken over by the Japanese; only a few remain which are operated by other groups.

Since January, 1946, 328 business and professional offices have emerged in Little Tokyo, but this is only a small fraction of the pre-war figure of 3200.

During the first half of 1946, according to Tom, restaurants were cropping up at the rate of one a week. Business was exceptionally good during the early days of relocation, but there has been a noticeable drop as the returnees found housing with cooking facilities.

Another factor in the decline was the loss of trade from Negroes who were squeezed out from Little Tokyo as the evacuees returned. The Negro business ranged from 50 to 75 per cent in some instances.

Tom says the outlook among business people in Little Tokyo is that their future lies in building up business in the wider community and they look forward to the time when Little Tokyo would collapse. Already many Japanese who have opened stores in Caucasian-populated areas are doing a thriving business.

Abacus Enterprise

The Frying Pan's award for enterprise goes this week to Martha Kaihatsu and associates of the newly-established American Abacus Institute of Chicago, who seized upon a news item and now are in the process of converting it into a business venture.

The abacus, if you remember, is that wooden frame business in which were strung a lot of beads and on which your dad used to figure his accounts. The news item had to do with a mathematics contest in Japan, where a second-rate male abacus expert beat the stuffing out of a G. I. accountant armed with a modern calculating machine. We call him second-rate because in a later contest against some Japanese girl experts this mere male didn't even place.

American Abacus Institute is marketing the abacus, together with an instruction book, in hopes of popularizing its use inasmuch as Mr. Average American has trouble with figures anyway and can scarcely hope to own his personal adding machine.

Perhaps the Burroughs people never may have to worry about competition from A. A. I., but there seems to be a good possibility of foisting the abacus on the public as something of a fad, like mah jong and happi coats. The time may come when every up-to-date hostess will include an abacus addition and subtraction contest in her repertoire of parlor games.

Martha, who reached Chicago by way of Heart Mountain, Santa Anita and Los Angeles, believes in keeping in the background because she thinks there is a prejudice against women in business. But we'd prefer to take our abacus lessons from her than any male associate of hers.

And then there's the little Sansei tot who said: "Mommy gave me two J. C. Penneys and I put them in my piggy bank."

Incidentally, with a child in the house one never knows when he skids on the linoleum whether it's a new wax job or something that dropped off the table during lunch.

Shortcake

To celebrate nothing much in particular other than that we're alive, we had strawberry (frozen) shortcake for dessert last Sunday. Having once earned $1.47 in a single day, long long ago, for picking strawberries, we still marvel that they are available in the dead of winter.

We wish to report the berries were well worth the cost, even though it means mixing more bread into the ground beef for the rest of the week to balance the budget.

We recall dimly the fairy tale of some poor waif whose wicked step-mother demanded that she go into the woods in January and bring home a mess of strawberries. A fairy godfather or some such leprechaun produced them for the waif and thus she escaped a whipping for the day.

We are vaguely troubled by not being able to recall the yarn any more clearly, but if they're still reading the story to the present crop of toddlers the teacher is laying herself wide open to some remark about the frozen food cabinet at the chain store.

Cowboy Artist Writes Book on Nisei Evacuees

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. — William S. (Billy) Warren, noted cowboy artist and writer, has written a 40,000 word novel about Japanese American evacuees.

Warren, once one of the nation's top cartoonists, is now the operator of an Elberta peach ranch on East Orchard mesa near here.

The author of numerous books, which he has illustrated himself, with western backgrounds, Warren was asked by his publishers to do a novel on the problems of Japanese American readjustment after relocation.

Warren, who has employed relocated Nisei on his peach ranch, wrote a novel which he has called "The Lost Medal" and which will be published soon.

To the Editor THE LETTERBOX

Would Like to Hear From 442nd Men

Gentlemen:

Have just received about 20 copies of your splendid publication, The Pacific Citizen. They have followed me half-way around the world, first to Italy, some back to the Islands and now back to Oklahoma, where I am now stationed. I read practically everything in your paper, even to the ads, as that is how I find out where some of my former men are located.

Am finding more time to write now that I am stationed permanently. I am at present the National Guard Instructor for the 279th Infantry Regiment with headquarters at Tulsa, Okla. This unit is a regiment of the Thunderbird or 45th Division. The 442nd RCT was attached to this Division for a while overseas, and several times we fought along side of their units.

I was indeed proud and glad to receive the 442nd in New York and to stay with them until their inactivation in Hawaii. It was a fulfillment of a statement I made after we came out of the Vosge Mountains after the rescue of the Lost Battalion. At that time in a discussion with some of the men, I stated that I was going to stay with the unit until its end if at all possible. Well, it was made possible by the Army and was a task that was gladly fulfilled.

The Regiment was wonderfully received upon its arrival in New York, as all the men who were fortunate to be with it at that time will testify. Our reception and treatment in Washington, D. C., was also splendid. The greatest reception I suppose, at least to the Island boys, was the one in Honolulu. It sure was some affair.

It was also my good fortune while in the Islands to accomplish a task which is generally left undone. This was the meeting of the families of the boys who were left overseas. A group of officers, Lt. Kobayashi, Lt. Vogt, Capt. Kurlan and myself visited approximately 75 per cent of the families on all the Islands. We extended the sympathies of the men of the Regiment and checked to see if they had received the personal property of their loved ones. We also made inquiries about insurance payments, the six months' gratuity pay and other forms of assistance. As a whole we found very few things we could help correct. The Territorial Veterans Service and the Veterans Administration were doing a good job and had the situation well in hand.

I would appreciate hearing from any of the men of the 442nd, and if they are in Tulsa, Okla., or in the vicinity, to be sure and stop by and pay me a visit. Am at present looking for a house, but am sure to have a Hawaiian Room in it if at all possible. At present I may be contacted at the National Guard Armory, 3900 East 15th St., Tulsa, Okla.

Hope to continue receiving your fine news publication and to be of aid and assistance in any way I possibly can to your cause.

Yours Respectfully,
ALFRED A. PURSALL
Lt. Col. Inf.

Need Foster Homes For Children

Dear Editor:

We come to you to appeal for foster homes for Japanese American children in the Chicago metropolitan area. There is constant need for good homes for six to ten different children. Their ages range from new-born babies to 13-year-olds.

You will be concerned, as we are, in the predicament in which three children now find themselves. They are in a distant, eastern city, under the care of a child welfare agency. There are two boys, 13 and 12 years, and a girl, 8 years of age. The mother has deserted the family periodically. Thus, the children have missed their birthright of the influence of mother's love and day-by-day care. The father has worked in Chicago for several years, so has established his residence here. He is eager to have the children near him so he and they may be together occasionally.

Very recently word came to one of the local child-placing agencies that these three children should be brought here and placed together in one home, or, if that is impossible to find, in two or three different foster homes. Only because the Chicago social agency did not have a proper home for these children, has it been necessary for them to remain so far apart from their father. If and when one or several Japanese American homes are found to care for foster children, can the question of these children again be considered. In the meantime, if you have enough love in your family to share it with these—or other—children who must live away from their own parents, and if you have an extra bed (or two or three), will you consider the plan seriously?

Will you write or telephone the Chicago Resettlers Committee of 1000, 734 North La Salle Street, Chicago 10, Ill.—SUPERior 6787, or to the United Home Finding Service, 1951 West Madison Street, Chicago 12, Ill.—MONroe 6313, telling of your interest? You will be given the opportunity to talk over the whole idea and decide if you can and should take a child into your home. If you are not fortunate enough to be able to do this yourself, will you help these children by talking with your neighbors and friends about this critical need for foster homes among Japanese American families? We are depending upon you!

Bradford Smith Tells Story Of Nisei in Magazine Article

"What's Happened to the Nisei?" an article discussing the present-day situation of Japanese Americans evacuated from the west coast in 1942, appears in the February issue of "This Month" magazine.

The writer is Bradford Smith, author of three novels on Japan and innumerable magazine articles on Japanese and the Nisei. During the war Smith was head of the Japanese section of OWI.

In "What's Happened to the Nisei?" Smith discusses a typical Nisei, John Tanida, and his readjustment after the evacuation program deprived him of his home and business. Tanida, who once owned a vegetable market in Los Angeles, is today in Philadelphia, where he has set up another market.

"Multiply John Tanida by 50,000, and you have the outlines of a development which has not only gone far to redeem a wartime injustice, but promises to enrich permanently the pattern of American life," writes Bradford Smith.

In his discussion of the evacuation the author says:

"Today many, including Naval Intelligence officers, declare that this evacuation of 110,000 men, women and children was an unnecessary, tragic waste.

"Yet paradoxically, this thoroughly unjustified move may prove a blessing in disguise to many Nisei, or Japanese Americans, because it is bringing them into the main stream of American life. Half of them have found new homes, new jobs, and a greater hope for the future than they ever had in their West Coast settlements."
