OREGON PASSES OWN VERSION OF NO-TAX ON CLAIMS

Speedy Action by Legislature Closes Another Nisei Chapter

Special to the Pacific Citizen SALEM, Ore. - Because the Oregon State Tax Commission sought to collect taxes on the few remaining evacuation claims late last year, the Japanese American Citizens League through its Pacific Northwest and Intermountain District Councils sought both administrative and legislative relief. This past week, legislative relief appeared with SB 415, introduced by State Sen. Anthony Yturri of Malheur County, being passed by both houses. It was passed in the Senate unanimously on April 18 and in the House with one dissenting voice on April 20. Reps. Sidney Bazett and Robert F. Smith carried the measure through the House.

Evacuation Story

In his statement to the press State Sen. Yturri recalled that in 1942, for the first time in American history, "our government evacuated some 110,000 people of Japanese ancestry from the west coast. At least two-thirds of these evacuees were American citizens "No precedent existed for this movement.

"Obviously, the evacuees lost large amount in damages to real and personal property. The Federal Reserve Bank estimated such losses to be $400 million.

Supreme Court Adds Ban Extended to All Public Facilities

WASHINGTON. - The United States Supreme Court Monday ruled racial segregation in any courtroom violates the Constitution. The unanimous opinion, which was unsigned, adds up to a total ban on state-enforced segregation in any public facility.

At a new trial in the Hustings Court, Johnson was convicted again and fined $10. The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals refused to hear an appeal on ground that the judgment was "plainly right" The Supreme Court granted a petition for review filed by Johnson and without argument reversed the conviction for contempt. The opinion cited three earlier decisions against segrega-

LI'L TOKIO 'NOMIYA' PROBLEM

The painful impact of the "nomiya" problem besieging Li'l Tokio becomes more extensive as each week passes. Last April 8, a disgruntled patron (a Nisei) killed the bar owner (a woman) and two waitresses (of the Anata, 206 S. San Pedro St.) then took his own life when cornered by the police. It made headlines in Tokyo, Honolulu (because the Nisei had graduated in 1949 from Leilehua High in Wahiawa) and Los Angeles.

By the end of that week, the conscience of Li'l Tokio began to fidget. Some were saying aloud there were too many nomiva in the area-14 of them, not counting the bars at restaurants and ryoriya. By the end of the second week, the So. Calif. Nisei Ministerial Fellowship went on public record to support and aid a community program to "bring about a higher cultural and moral standard in our community". And the Japanese Chamber of Commerce called a special meeting of individuals to determine a course of action as urged by the Nisei ministers. By the end of the third week, the Japanese Chamber agreed a citizens' committee should be organized to clean up the nomiya problem. As the fourth week passes today, a community conference has been called this Sunday to "protect the general welfare of Li'l Tokio"

Sgt. Stanley Uno of the L.A. Police Dept. describes the problem as a "B-girl" operation.

Kametaro Kame, the Li'l Tokio Ryoriya Assn. president, said attention was called three years ago to the overissuance of alcoholic beverage licenses and had asked the issuing agency to restrict further permits in the area. However, the the request was ignored and consequently a large number of bars was permitted to open in Li'l Tokio. His association asserts no jurisdiction over the business conduct of its mem-

This crusade against the nomiya has resulted in (1) public agencies - law enforcement, city and county government-poised for action and (2) community forces-business, civic, churches and the press-mustered in support.

This profusion of the nomiya within a compact 10-block ket forces. area that is Li'l Tokio seems to oppose the Brewers Almanac, which shows more drinking is done at home now, since the sale of beer for home consumption has been steadily outpacing its sale in drinking places even before the TV era. Perhaps the drinking patterns of Li'l Tokio is more Oriental in nature than American.

This American pattern started with moderate and presumably beneficent drinking of the early colonists. The "abusers" and popularization of distilled spirits began to cause anxiety in the minds of many leaders and gave impetus to the American temperance movement by the 1800s, which eventually became successfully prohibitive through the 18th Amendment. By the mid-19th century, drinking was chiefly a male practice, mostly divorced from family life and almost limited to hard liquor. The Great West was "won" under these conditions. In recent times as the status of women altered, behaviors such as drinking and smoking once largely reserved to men were assumed by the opposite sex.

Drinking patterns vary in different countries and civilizations. The French and Italian imbibe great quantities of wine and generally accept it; though in the United States, drinking is rejected as "wrong" by one-third of the adult population, but "right" by the others. American attitude toward drunkenness is also either way-ambivalent. The Orthodox Jews, because wine is used in religious ritual, see nothing immoral or unusual about the use of alcohol. The Chinese and Japanese also exhibit well-integrated drinking customs -that is, all segments of society know and accept drinking as consistent with the rest of its culture. The Orientals do most of their drinking under familiar, regulated circumstances to celebrate-not to get drunk.

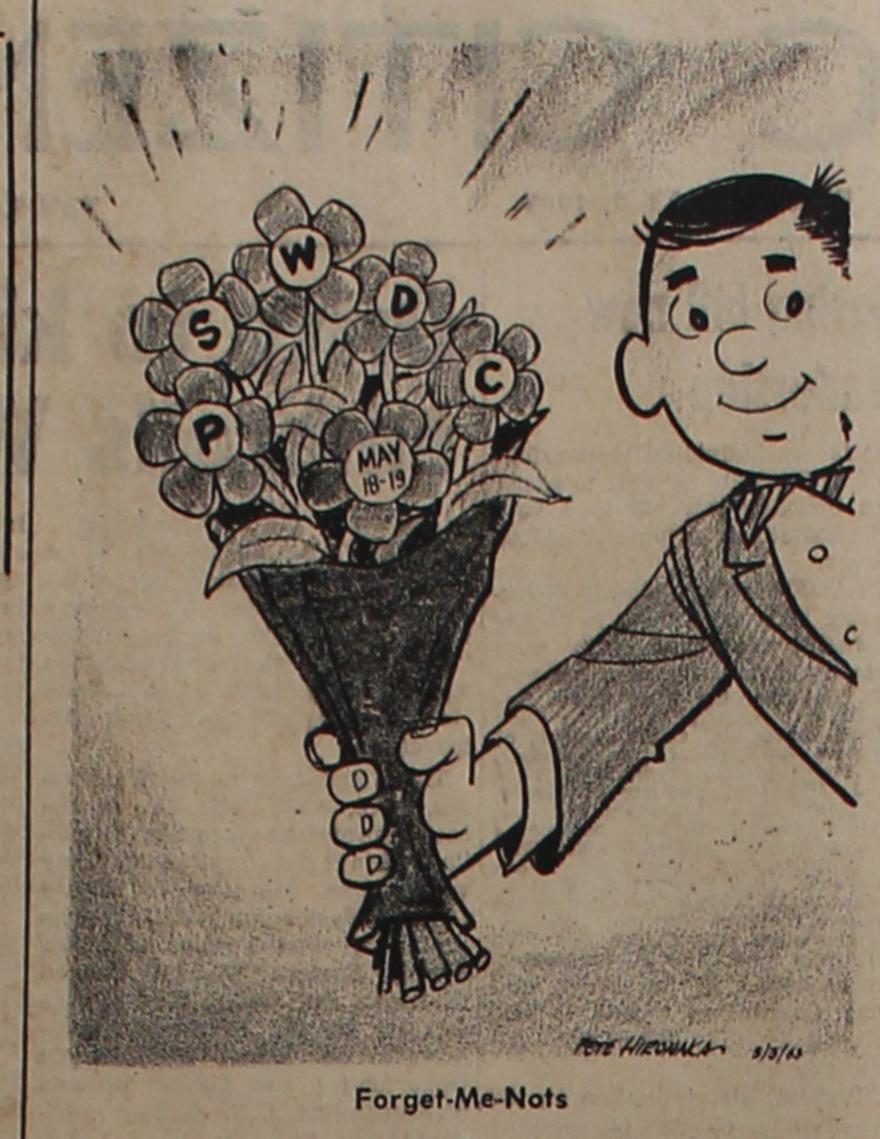

A Yale scholar on alcoholism offers a description of an American drinking custom that is in contrast with the integrated drinking patterns of Europe and Asia. He refers to the New Englanders-Protestant, middle-class, urban, white, of Anglo-Saxon background of three or more generations:

The social functions of drinking are rather vague-drawing family members as well as strangers together often for the purposes of "fun" or relaxation from moral norms. Rules for drinking are variable so that one may follow one set with holidays and show even different patterns when away from his family, another with his business associates, a third on the hometown. Sanctions for violations are irregular, though parents, employers, physicians, ministers and other agencies of sanction make them known. And when the custom is picked up, especially by the young, it is often attended with feelings of guilt, hostility and exhibitionism, and may occur as a secretive practice insofar as parents or employers are concerned.

The contrast of American and Oriental drinking customs and attitudes may explain the Li'l Tokio nomiya problem. The Issei have one set of values on drinking while the Nisei have another.

Li'l Tokio should know its place and realize it cannot go overboard on this Japanese culture bit even though acceptable in Japan but not in America.

(P.S.: I am not a drinking man - orange juice is my speed at these cocktail parties, as my friends well know.)

MAN ON THE MOVE - There may be Nisei who travel farther and more frequently than Toge Fujihira, but I doubt it. Fujihira, as readers of this column ought to know by now, is the Seattle-born cinematographer whose assignments take him to strange and distant parts of the world. There's hardly a corner he hasn't visited in the course of taking documentary motion pictures, and it seems he spends more time on the road than at home in Rosslyn Heights, Long Island, N.Y.

Not long ago Fujihira returned from an extended trip through Southeast Asia where he met, or heard about, a number of Nisei taking part in the struggle to help underdeveloped nations enter the Twentieth Century. "I keep running into Nisei more and more in various parts of the world," he wrote on his return. "They are looking beyond the boundaries of the U.S.A. to render service."

IN INDIA - Fujihira met four Nisei in India. Ka Kawate from Portland, Ore., is serving his second five-year term as a Methodist missionary, working as a sanitary engineer, at Jullundur in the Punjab.

A husband-wife team is stationed at Allahabad. Dr. Dick Matsuura, a Presbyterian missionary, is horticulturist at the Allahabad Agricultural Institute. His wife, Dr. Ruth Hase Matsuura, from Hanford, Calif., is a pediatrician.

At the Allahabad Language Institue, Fujihira met Dr. Symon Satow from Cleveland, Ohio, a surgeon studying Hindi preparatory to being assigned to a mission hospital by the Presbyterian Board.

IN NEPAL - Hard by the Himalayas, in Nepal, Fujihira ran into Dr. Fred Okada of New York. Dr. Okada first went out to work on his doctorate in anthropology, and is now employed by the United States Agency for International Development.

At Katmandu was Hisa Asaoka, born in Seattle and relocated to Bridgeport, Conn., head surgical nurse at the United Mission Hospital.

IN PAKISTAN - At Karachi, Fujihira had lunch with another ex-Seattleite, Kenji Okuda, who is with the Agency for International Development as an adviser in finance and economics at the University of Karachi. Okuda, whose father, H.H. Okuda, was a pioneer Seattle Issei, told Fujihara about Harold Muraoka in the commercial section of the U.S. Embassy in Karachi; Shig Takahashi, World Bank representative from San Francisco; Victor Matsui with the U.S. Embassy as political officer, and his wife who is a nurse in the Embassy dispensary.

Fujihira writes that he heard of a number of other Nisei in the general area, some of whom were Peace Corps volunteers, but he couldn't pin down names and professions.

NOT A CHINESE — Fujihira was in India soon after the Chinese Communists launched their attack on India, and he quickly had to learn to say, "My chi-ni naheen hun," which he says means "I am not a Chinese." Japanese nationals wore miniature Japanese flags on their lapels and had their cars plainly marked, he reports.

All this is sadly reminiscent of the days after the attack on Pearl Harbor when "I am a Chinese" buttons blossomed on the lapels of West Coasters who didn't want to be mistaken for Japanese. Things seem to have changed a lot, but they really haven't changed at all, have they?

As for Fujihira, when he identified himself as an American, he got a warm welcome. U.S. arms and supplies were gratefully received by India, and Fujihira as a representative of the American taxpayer was showered with the Indian man on the street's appreciation.

SPRING STEEL COMES TO AID OF CHOPSTICK USERS

TOKYO. - "E-Z Chops" has been invented by Capt. George A. Dawes of the U.S. Air Force stationed at the Fuchu Air Base. He has a Japanese patent and is now applying for an American patent.

Expected to retail for about 35 cents in Japan, the mechanical aid to eating with chopsticks works on the pincer principle. The plastic chopsticks are connected at the handle end by a piece of spring steel. This keeps the tips separated when not in use but together when pressure is applied to pick up a bite of food.

The tips are notched for better grip. Said the 20-year careerist who has been in Japan for the past three years: "I'm very proficient with regular chopsticks, but find E-Z chops so much easier that I prefer to use them. So do I, my family-and my friends."
