The rights of Negroes as citizens of the United States were further reaffirmed under the Constitutional guarantees, particularly those contained in the Bill of Rights and in the 14th Amendment. Moreover, in the Pledge of Allegiance, the final clause, "with liberty and justice for all," applies equally to our Negro citizens.

Rationalization by large segments of our population and even of our members, even though in some respects these observations be true, that the Negroes are not capable of becoming equal citizens with others, that they live in poverty, that they are not infledged citizens, or do not have sufficient education to take their place as equal citizens, is totally irrelevant to the fact that they are entitled to social justice and equal rights accorded to all citizens of the United States .

Prior to the parade, President Kennedy will receive a representative delegation of marchers at the White House. There is even a possibility, though remote, that he may personally address the huge gathering at the Washington Monument assembly point.

At the Lincoln Memorial rally, in addition to short speeches by the Negro leaders, there will be short talks by Mathew Ahmann of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, Eugene Carson Blake of the National Council of Churches, Rabbi Joachim Prinz of the American Jewish Congress, and Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers.

From the Frying Pan

Denver, Colo. ON THE MENU - The Armed Forces Food and Container Institute at Chicago, whatever that is, recently polled 20,000 enlisted men about their food likes and dislikes and came up with some not particularly startling information. Soldiers like milk, grilled steak, fresh fruit, apple pie, veal steak, eggs-to-order, sliced tomatoes, southern fried chicken, and roast beef sandwiches with gravy.

The list of foods they don't like is headed by iced coffee, spinach with cheese sauce, sour cream, instant coffee, buttermilk, sweet-sour cabbage, cauliflower vegetable salad, baked liver, harvard beets and rhubarb pie.

What this brings to mind is that back in WRA Camp days some 20 years ago, the traditional cuts of meat were rather hard to come by. This, of course, was a hardship shared by all Americans since the better things of life seem to have a habit of disappearing as soon as war rears its ugly head. In institutional living, however, food quickly takes on great importance and the lack of meat became a source of considerable discontent.

An astonishing amount of animal products listed somewhat indelicately on the official lists as "edible offal" found their way to the camp messhalls, and a large part of our protein requirements was consumed in the form of beef and pork hearts and livers. A little bit of such choice cuts went a long way.

I've forgotten now exactly where it happened, but it seems that it was Topaz (a misnamed place, if there ever was one) WRA Center in Utah. Some eminent sociologist arrived to make still another of those interminable studies, and to relieve the boredom some of the fellows assigned to show the visitor around decided to have a little fun.

Their opportunity came at dinnertime. They and the visitor sat down in the messhall for a meal whose main course was baked beef hearts.

"Oh boy," exclaimed one of the evacuees, "beef hearts." He attacked the meat with pretended gusto.

"What's so special about beef hearts?" the visitor asked. "Nothing," said the evacuee. "But it's meat, ain't it?" The visitor suddenly decided he wasn't very hungry.

DIFFERENCE OF VIEWPOINTS-What are considered delicacies in some cultures don't make a great deal of gustatorial sense in others. I remember the visitor from Japan a few Novembers ago who had been built up about the delights of the traditional Thanksgiving feast which, of course, would be topped off by pumpkin pie. Somehow the pumpkin pie made a great impression on him, and so he this year's Miss Japan at the Long nese conductor who appeared at Abandonment of the trailer ate delicately of the turkey and other goodies, intending to save plenty of room for the pie.

Imagine his disappointment when he discovered the pumpkin was nothing more than 'kabocha," or squash, a vegetable held in rather low esteem among the Japanese.

A GHASTLY AMOUNT OF MEAT - Perhaps I've told this story before, but it seems appropriate for repeating in this column. Back during the Korean war, soldiers representing various United Nations armed forces were dispatched on a tour of the U.S. to emphasize the united nature of the war effort.

A couple of young Korean farm boys were included. When they arrived in Denver the fellows at the Non-Commissioned Officers Club at Lowry Air Force Base treated the visitors to enormous steaks as a gesture of Western hospitality.

One of the Koreans complained to me about it later. "Such a ghastly amount of meat," he said, "all in one piece, and not flavored with sugar and soy sauce or anything. It turned my stomach."

I treated him to a meal of rice and pickles and he was delighted
