INSIDE THE LOS ANGELES RIOT AREA

For three nights this past week, there was a tenuous quiet around our neighborhood. We live in the northwest sector of the 46 square mile area declared as "unsafe" because of the chaotic rioting, thus subject to an 8 p.m.-todawn curfew by proclamation of the Governor.

Some persons in the area may have been uneasy by the enforced hush, broken up by an occasional wail of sirens whining in the still night air, the rumble of Army trucks ransporting Guardsmen from their bivouac to their posts and a mockingbird serenading the full August moon. But I elt quite relieved at home, knowing the "unsafe" zone was inder constant surveillance.

As statistics of the aftermath come to light, now that he curfew has been lifted, nearly 400 buildings were burned lown or destroyed by fire in about as many blocks within he curfew area. Most of them were commercial. Only two nomes were burned down-and these were adjacent to comnercial structures. There is no count as yet on the number f buildings which sustained minor damages, such as broken vindows—but these must be in the excess of 1,000.

Coming out of the barricaded curfew zone in the mornngs driving into Li'l Tokio, there were National Guardsnen in combat fatigues and camouflaged helmet, shoulderng their rifles with bayonet at major intersections. Some irected traffic. Three sat in a jeep parked nearby. These eeps had mounted machine guns. If there were some burned ut buildings on the corner, the scene resembled a war zone -which was hard to believe. And the soldiers were there then we re-entered the curfew area before sundown.

The cars we saw being stopped or searched by the soliers or police officers all had Negro occupants. And this ractice seemed to prevail within the curfew area. Not all f the cars with Negro occupants were being stopped howver-since we only got around during the daylight hours uring the curfew period. All vehicles entering the curfew one after hours were automatically checked. It was about 5 years ago that the military was doing the same if occuants of the car happened to be Oriental or Japanese more pecifically.

Before the curfew was declared, the three nights preeding were disquieting. Sirens crooned constantly. The ight air was hot and sticky. Local television covered the olocaust and havoc from the air by helicopter, giving the udience a bird's eye view.

And since the night a highway patrolman made his outine arrest of a youth for drunken driving near Watts, ne conversation stations were filled with opinions of why ne riot started, what ought to be done, etc.

I'm convinced that the Negro racial stereotype is more ronounced than ever-though clearer heads offered logial rebuttal to little avail.

In back of my mind, there was a fear that the old Japaese racial stereotype could be evoked, if circumstances llowed it, to the ruin of that precariously perched penchant hat the Nisei are "in" today.

The City of Angels where race relations was regarded n the up-swing is no better than those communities in the outh and the North where anti-minority blood has been hed. I guess Angelenos were only fooling themselves. One oung Negro boy from Watts told us he was glad the riot ook place for it exposed the problem in all of its nastiness. iscriminations in the past have been subtle or silently borne y the Negro, he explained, but now the whole world knows os Angeles has a big problem.

The first morning after the curfew was imposed, we rove into the Broadway-Vernon area (where we used to live ntil the Harbor Freeway pushed us out), which was a shockng scene of smouldering ruins. Roofs of buildings had crashd onto the ground because of the fire, show windows were mashed and merchandise looted. Bold signs reading "Negrowned" or "Blood Brother" in front spared some shops. istead of smog smarting our eyes, there was that smell of re in the air there.

THE FIRST IMMIGRANTS-Last week, we told the story of Manjiro, the shipwrecked 14-year-old Japanese fisherman who was rescued by a New England whaler and brought to the United States in 1841. Japan was a hermit nation then, its only contact with the world being through a small group of Dutch traders at Nagasaki. Manjiro was considered a curiosity in Massachusetts, although he was well-treated and

In his 1956 book, "Manjiro, the Man Who Discovered America," Hisakazu Kaneko tells of Manjiro's encounter with Jim Crow. One Sunday he went to church with his benefactor, Capt. William Whitfield, and sat with him in the family pew-"One of the deacons of the church," Kaneko writes, "came to see Captain Whitfield after a few weeks and told him that the Japanese boy would have to sit in the pew for Negroes, because some of the members had objected to having

IMMIGRANT'S VIEW-If Manjiro appeared strange to Americans, America also seemed odd to Manjiro. In the forthcoming book, "Yankees and Samurai," by Foster Rhea Dulles (Harper & Row) is the following:

"Manjiro was greatly interested that ordinary men wore the strange custom of sitting on chairs . . . He had a good quantities if they do. Vulgar people drink like the Japanese.'

On June 27, 1848, he cast off in a small boat off the coast of Hokkaido from the American ship, the Plymouth. Ainu villagers took him to a Japanese military outpost. He was jailed, but well-treated. Eventually he was taken to Nagasaki, still under guard, and given everything he needed except freedom. Finding himself unwanted, MacDonald took an American ship back to British Columbia where, nearly a half century later, he published the story of his trip.

Dependable at Canneries In the Northwest and in Alaska

the Issei established a reputation as dependable workers in the fish canneries. It was dirty and nasty work, but the pay was good. It was the Issei who followed the Chinese in cleaning the salmon and running the butchering muchines. There were 2,132 Issei in Alaska and 1,500 in the Puget Sound and Columbia River regions in 1909 engaged in fish canning. The famous packs of Alaskan red sockeye salmon and pink salmon came from these can-

The canneries through the contract system transferred the risks of putting up the annual fish pack. First, it was the Chinese contractors or their Issei sub bosses, later the Issei contractors who assumed this responsibility by hiring Issel for the season. While the salmon were running the men worked 16 to 20 hours a day. For absences Maruyama, Takashi T., 56: Gardena, from work the Issei were penalized

These Issei "Alaska boys" were hired from special Alaska hotels and Seattle boarding houses for the season lasting from late spring to early autumn. During the long sea trip the men would buy extras in food or drink to make up for the dulge in "bakuchi." The pay for boredom and poor food and also inthe whole season's work in those days was from $160 to $225 plus board and room. The Issei bosses controlled the commissary and gambling, so by the time the worker paid off his debts he was lucky to wind up with $30 to his credit.

Before World War II many Nisei students fortunate enough to land a summer job in the Alaskan fish canneries made ample wages to cluding board and room. Motivated it in gambling like their Issei fore- Payashi. Mrs. Bert. 71: June 23-h. d
