A number of resolutions have also been introduced for the purpose of drafting an amendment to the U.S. Constitution on apportionment of state legislatures. At present, 32 states have passed resolutions (see PC, April 14: Ye Editor's Desk). California is not among those states which have asked for calling of a constitutional convention.

"Since a constitutional convention has never been called since the Constitution was drafted in 1787, the mind boggles at the possibilities," Hotta noted.

Thirty of the state resolutions embody an amendment similar to that sponsored by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.), which aims to nullify the Supreme Court "one manone vote" decision of 1964. The decision was particularly important to California for it intensified the rivalry between northern and southern California and the question of representation of rural and urban areas, Hotta added.

"JOURNEY TO WASHINGTON"

Early next month, Senator Daniel K. Inouye's inspiring autobiography, "Journey To Washington", will hit the bookstands.

While few have been privileged to read the manuscript (we understand that the Senator's wife Margaret and his family in Hawaii, for instance, won't be able to read it until after its publication date), we were allowed to skim over the typewritten pages early in the year.

Though it has little to say about the Mainland from Here, Saturday night at Japanese, it is, nevertheless, a most absorbing chronicle of the first American of Japanese ancestry ever to be elected to the United States Congress. Its account of the Senator's youth in Hawaii should be a revelation to most Mainland Nisei, while his heroics with the 442nd Regimental Combat Team, already known to many, are related with humor and good taste, including the action for which he was recommended for the Congressional Medal of Honor, and for which he received the Distinguished Service Cross. His decision to turn to politics and his early successes too, while rather well known, are told with background details that explain how a public servant is born. His election to the National House of Representatives after Hawaii became a State, with the real story behind his withdrawal from the Senate campaign, is disclosed in all its poignancy, as well as his friendship and admiration for President Lyndon Johnson. His autobiography, moto, maru. written in collaboration with Lawrence Elliott, a writer for Readers' Digest, ends with his being sworn in as the first United States Senator of Japanese ancestry.

Told with humility and dignity, it is a story in ed to associate director, Data which all Japanese Americans can be proud. And, all persons of Japanese ancestry can share reflected glory in his accomplishments as recorded in his autobiography. Truly, it is an uplifting epic that should thrill and inspire all of Japanese ancestry, especially at Norristown, Pa., is serving on those in these United States.

"Anyone with the presumption to write his autobiography at the age of 42 ought to have his head examined," the Senator, who has been requested to author such a life's history ever since he was first elected to Congress in 1959, has said repeatedly. But he decided to do it after his first, and thus far only, there by Japanese Consul Genchild—a son, Kenny—was born, "the son for whom we had waited 15 years."

He wanted to preserve his unique and unusual in the Bureau of Public Works, story for the boy before details escaped him, and also to let his parents know, while they are still alive, how wonderful they are. His autobiography is a kind of "open letter to my son, wife, parents, and my country."

Actually, "Journey To Washington" is the story of his father's visit to the nation's capital to witness the swearing in of his Senator son.

It all began in 1889 when a fire broke out in a remote backwoods village in Japan and the Inouye family was blamed for it. So, to repay that "debt of honor", his great grandfather sent his grandfather and his grandfather's eldest son to Hawaii "to seek a better life and to earn enough to pay for the fire damage."

"If it weren't for the fire, I suppose I would be picking tea leaves, tending a mushroom farm, or tilling the rice paddies in Japan," the Senator speculates.

The book ends with the Senator's father coming to Washington in January 1963 to see him sworn in. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield invited father and son to his private quarters for a "sumptious lunch", and, while they were there, President John Kennedy called and invited the father to the White of optomery and had been House. The White House visit lasted a half-hour in- practicing until his death. stead of the scheduled five minutes and included a personally conducted presidential tour of the historic

When they were leaving the President, reporters clustered around and "my father made his first speech" the Senator remembers, saying "I would like to thank the people of Hawaii for being so gracious to my son. Yesterday I saw him sworn in and had lunch with the Majority Leader . . . Today, I met the President . . . Now, I can die."

Prentice-Hall, the publishers, are going all-out in promoting this book, which they feel will be a bestseller. A leading magazine is expected to serialize it, ligion chapel, Berkeley. as will one of the leading Honolulu dailies. It is expected to be translated into many languages, as proof of the American dream.

Three outstanding men in Government - President Johnson. Vice President Humphrev, and Senate Majority Leader Mansfield - have written forwards to the autobiography, which we commend as one that cught to be in the library of every Japanese American.

Because of its special meaning to JACLers, this autobiography is being made available in advance of its publication date as another membership service Publishers' Association for Culfor five dollars a conv (retail list price $5.95).

Immigration

Will a Stay of Eight Months Abroad for Business Reasons Break the Continuity of Residence Required for Naturalization?

Question: I came to the United States on an immigration visa five years ago. About a year and a half ago I had to go back to the country of my former residence for business reasons and was delayed in my return for approximately eight months. At the end of that time I returned to the United States. When will I be eligible for naturalization?

Answer: Generally speaking, an applicant for citizenship must have resided continuously within the United States for at least five years immediately preceding the date on which his petition is filed United States for at least two and one-half years. Moreover, the applicant must have lived the last six months of the five-year period in the State in which he files his petition. From the Frying Pan

Denver, Colo. THE SHAPE OF THINGS - In no field of professional endeavor have the Nisei been more brilliant than in architecture. Their creations, many of which charm. display the traditional sensitivity to beauty of their cultural heritage, are rising to grace far parts of the world. Minoru Yamasaki of Birmingham, Mich., has been well-known and well-respected in the profession for a decade and a half — ever since he and his colleagues built the St. Louis Municipal Air Terminal. After Seattle's Century 21 Exhibition in 1962, in which he designed six buildings, his fame spread East L.A. Sadao is Shoji Sadao with headquarters in Civil rights volunteer lawyer Cambridge, Mass., and a registered architect of North Carolina, Illinois and Colorado.

A U.S. Information Service press release says addresses New York JACLERS Sadao has done research on mass housing for General Electric, preliminary design for the University of Colorado Fine Arts Gallery, and was field supervisor for the Office of International Trade Fairs from 1957 to 1958 when he supervised construction of the geodesic dome American Pavilion at Tokyo and Osaka International Trade Fairs. His experience also includes work on the Dymaxion Airocean World Map, paperboard geodesic domes at the Decima Triennale of Milan, Italy, and design of lightweight mobile structures for the U.S. Marine Corps shelter program.

A THANK OFFERING — Another important piece of architectural news comes from Father Leo H. Tibesar of the Maryknoll order. Father Tibesar was in Seattle at the time of the evacuation and proved a tower of strength and wisdom for his flock in that troubled time. After the war he was assigned to Kyoto, Japan, where he set out to build a church, with the support of Nisei, as a thank offering for God's providential care during the war.

George Nakashima, who like Yamasaki is a former Seattleite, undertook the design of the building. Nakashima is best known for his furniture designing in New Hope, Pa., but he studied architecture in France, built a school in Pondicherry, French India, before World War II, and has church buildings to his credit in such widely separated areas as Tokyo and the New Mexico desert. Now, Father Tibesar reports, the Kyoto church has been completed.

Photographs of the Kyoto church, named Church of Christ the King, are published in the November, 1966 issue of "Liturgical Arts", a quarterly devoted to the arts of the Catholic Church. The floor plan is diamond-shaped. The roof is a hyperbolic paraboloid, and the building is of reinforced concrete which the magazine points out is less expensive than frame construction in Japan. The main area seats 170 and three large round windows on two sides of the structure are reminiscent of the Chinese moon gates.

The same issue of "Liturgical Arts" carries an article titled "Church Architecture in Japan and the Impact of the Liturgy" by Mira Nakashima Amagasu, White River Valley daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Nakashima. She majored in architectural sciences at Radcliffe and at- installs Tom Hikida tended Waseda University, Tokyo, where she earned AUBURN, Wash.-Tom Hikida a master's degree in architecture.

RECLAMATION BUREAU — Closer to home, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation shortly will dedicate its new office building in the Denver Federal Center. Its chief architect was Gyo Obata of St. Louis. The building towers over the sprawling Federal Center and already is a landmark in the Denver area. Since the building is a major addition to the Reclamation Bureau's facilities, its dedication will get a lot of attention hereabouts.

Exploiters and the Exploited

Q.—"What were your best earning years?" A.—"$25,000 in 1905."

An editor read the foregoing in our Issei Interview Survey schedule and asked, "How could an Issei make that kind of money sixty years ago?" This Issei was a labor contractor for an Alaskan salmon cannery. Times were ripe for those few English-speaking Issei to make big money. Issei arrivals were swelling in number. Developing Pacific and Mountain States needed laborers. Issei labor contractors brought the two together and reaped rewards.

For 1899, immigration figures record 2,844 Issei admitted. From 1900 yearly admissions jump to 12,635 and stay above that figure for some eight years with an estimated 5,000 more annually from Hawaii.

Issei Needed Jobs — These Issei newcomers, mostly laborers, fitted into the "oya-bun, ko-bun" system of paternalism with which they were familiar in Japan. Disembarking Issei went to boarding houses kept by fellow kenjin in Pacific coast ports. These "ryokan" served as employment centers supplying railroads, canneries of the Northwest, lumber mills, mines and smelters, and farm labor.

Boarding house keepers were labor contractors themselves or allied with contractors who paid them fees for men furnished. "Oya-bun" made deals with employers for their "ko-bun." Employers liked this easy source for large numbers of laborers without hiring individually. They shifted their problems to the labor contractor leaving him to worry about work conditions and welfare. These "keiyaku-nin" were interpreters, superintendents, and as agents of the men in their charge acted as their collective bargainers. Oya-Bun Got Work - The typical Saburo Suzuki was willing to do any work. He couldn't speak English, had few skills, enjoyed scarcely any contacts and found the U.S. strange. He had to work with other Issei under an interpreter. The labor unions opposed him remembering the earlier Chinese who undercut wages.

In this situation the Issei "bosu" ("boshi" according to Hiroshima dialect) got the Saburo Suzukis jobs which the many other European immigrants turned down. The "bosu" thus obtained less desirable work at low pay but as soon as his Saburo Suzukis demonstrated they were good workers the contractor shrewdly bargained for better

Affluent Contractors - Saburo, tery. working at an Alaskan cannery's smelly and disagreeable labor, made from $160 to $225 for the May to September season. The contractor made 40 cent per case and got an allowance from the company for food to Saburo but fed him for less. THE ULTIMATE CITY

Los Angeles-to some, the land of milk and honey—is one of nuts and bolts to Christopher Rand, New Yorker staff MACK TWAIN reporter who even took to the helicopter to see all there has to be seen about my hometown in his latest book, LOS ANGELES-THE ULTIMATE CITY (Oxford Press, $5).

Rand examines the urban sprawl, the prevalence of right-wing politics, the difficult role of Mexican Americans and the aerospace industry with such detail and sympathy that it rates with the series of "Inside" books by John Gun-

There are six chapters (Physical, Mechanical, Occupational, Racial, Cultural and Political) in which Rand sketches the attractions, the spirit and the sighs that permeate L.A.

The piece on the jacket calls attention to racial minorities, including the Japanese. The index is liberal with page references on the Japanese American, the Issei, Nisei, occupations, relations with Anglos, relations with Mexican Americans, relations with Negroes, Sansei and the World War II detention camps.

Not listed, however, is the Japanese-American Citizen's League (as Rand spells it) mentioned in the chapter on Political in a paragraph (p. 179) mentioning the flow of outside money to UCLA where intensive studies on minorities are underway.

The book is a tighter version of his series which appeared in the New Yorker earlier this year. For an up-to-date look at Los Angeles, Oxford Press has been extremely expeditious in having Rand's latest book off the press by the April 6 publication date.
