From the

Denver, Coio. WITHOUT IT, A JAPANESE IS NOTHING-A Japanese word emerged from the past this week and stirred some old memories. The word is "koseki", bers, Dean Asami, is the topmeaning family register. Many Nisei had a passing ranking bowler with a 211 acquaintance with the word; I venture to guess few Sansei have ever heard it. It appeared in the February-March issue of the magazine called 37, published by the Keio Plaza Inter-Continental Hotel. Its editor and publisher is Day Inoshita, a Tokyo Nisei public relations consultant who among other things was member (687) - Nancy Machara 133, Linof the Tokyo news staff of both Associated Press and 145, Rachael Inouye 147, Fran Mary Okita 148, Yuki Kato, Capt. Kendo Yasuda 162. United Press.

Koseki is discussed in a story titled "If He's a Japanese, He Has One!" and we'd like to quote from it:

"The koseki is a Japanese male or female's official certificate of birth, nationality, marriage, divorce, adoption and eventual death. Without it, he or she cannot enter a school, obtain a passport, get a job (in many cases) or acquire a driver's license.

"As many a Nisei born in the United States or Reiko Yut 155. Canada without the foggiest notion of a koseki discovered to his shock before the war, the simple act by his Japanese father of registering his offspring's 153. birth in the family register made him a Japanese national . . . and liable to Japan's then existent military conscription laws."

This, of course, is where the matter of dual citizenship came in. The Nisei were accused of owing loyalty to Japan, and technically they did by the fact of having been registered in the family record in infancy. But darned few of them were aware of it and some who were took the necessary steps to have their names removed from the record. The article goes on to say:

"A person's koseki is a public document available to anyone for the asking. Just apply at the local village, town or city ward where the record is kept. The office will give the applicant a copy of the family register listing the person's name, permanent address -usually his ancestral home—and immediate members of his family with particulars. In previous years the koseki also listed his ancestry and immediate relatives, his social rank and his criminal record

"The koseki could serve as an instrument for both good and bad. It created tight family ties under an interior autocratic patriarch, though postwar reforms have done away with this. By giving the Japanese a family Honma 157, Ruby Ishida 144, Yuki clan and a 'furusato'—ancestral home—it gave him 164, Sets Okino 151. the sense of belonging, and a strong sense of family honor, of responsibility for not staining the family Namba 134, Nats Hashitani 148, name. It was also a convenient tool for the authorities Mae Nakamura 161. Capt. 156, Masa to keep an eye on the movement of criminals . . . and the notorious 'thought police' to keep tab on suspected Buddhist conference 'liberals' during the days of militarism.

"To a greater or lesser degree, it has helped shape LOS ANGELES - The 31st Ayako Kurakazu, Capt. 174, Lois (865)-Gary Kurotsuchi 176, Lou sadors, Honolulu (896)-David the national character of the Japanese people. Much that foreigners find in the Japanese—the good, bad and the unfathomable—owes something to this system, directly or indirectly."

In earlier days, the article says, clerks worked laboriously with brush and ink to produce copies of koseki, and errors were inevitable. "One of the cases that turned out for the better is that of George Kawako, an executive with a professional baseball team. His family name was Ogawa, a very common name which means Small River. But a clerk mistakenly wrote his name River Small, Kawako. Rather than go through red tape to change that back again, George kept the name. Besides, he explains, 'there could be a million Ogawas, but I'm the only Kawako'."

Copying machines now make such errors unlikely, but perhaps not impossible. In any event, with a few if any Japanese Americans being listed on the ancestral family register these days, the word "koseki" is now curiosity out of the fading past for Sansei and Yonsei.

JACL-PC RENEWALS

When Renewing Your Membership • Use Full Name. Nickname (if previously used)

- and middle name requested. (There are 13 George Nakamuras in our files; one chapter has two George Nakamuras.) Use Same Address. It is confusing to find address of home used one year, then business address the - following year. If address has changed since the 1972 membership, specify that address is "new". • Check 'Renewal' Box. This indicates 1972 JACL
- membership. Otherwise, person must check "New" box on membership card. (JACL membership in 1971 or earlier is not a renewal for PC purposes.)

About Changes of Address • Three weeks are required to effect any Change of Address. Advance notice of move will avoid interruption of service as Newspapers, generally are not forwarded to a new address. (This will also reduce the number of irate subscribers, who may have notified the Post Office but neglected to tell the Pacific Citizen but complain afterward.)

Student Member Subscriptions

. JAY. Jr. JACL and Student Members are entitled the Pacific Citizen upon remittance at the current JACL member rate of $3.50 per year. Address of student away from home is welcome.

Multiple Families at One Address

· Several families may live at the same address. In such cases, the only PC-per-household policy is waived; but a clarification must be noted on the Membership Card sent to National Headquarters.

PC Subscription Not Desired

• While every JACL household can be a PC subscriber, some do not desire the paper and can check the box on the Membership Card accordingly. (Yet there have been tragic instances where this box was checked by mistake, necessitating extensive correspondence to rectify the error.)

On Transferring Chapters

• If member renews through another chapter, specify name of the previous chapter.

A Renewed Commitment

Washington

When I was in Los Angeles a couple of weeks ago to address the 20th anniversary commemorative luncheon of the Bank of Tokyo of California, Editor Harry Honda asked that I resume writing periodically for The Pacific Citizen.

Since JACL, to which I have devoted most of my life, is entering into a new era, and since I sincerely believe that the unique and inspired experience of the Nisei before, during, and after World War II can Kineya Kichisaburo, master drums throughout the parade. be a constructive force not only in JACL and the Japa- of Nagauta, Japanese classicnese American population but also in the Nation as well, I agreed to do so, particularly since a number of my friends and supporters over the years also asked the Wakafuji Kai, a newly- Saturday, March 24, 12:30 to that I do so.

According to Headquarters after some 25 years of dedicated and selfless service to JACL, with my having left JACL too as its Washington Representative after some 30 years last July (1972), with practically every member of the National Board now of the so-called post-World War II generation, and with David Ushio and his new associates of the JACL staff almost untouched personally by the travail and tragedy of Evacuation and jima Kansuma and Bando Mithe unprecedented activity and triumphs of JACL in the 1950s, it was thought that some one who could recall the memorable Nisei experience of those times mgiht be able to help keep alive the faith and the spirit of the Nisei as a meaningful influence both within the American Japanese society as such and the country as a whole.

Whether I can meet that challenge or not is prob- 3 at 8:30 p.m. Pronko is one located at the corned of Pine lematical. But, I shall try.

That the Nisei proved themselves is now a proud fact of history.

Regardless of our own personal feelings about the completely new team that has undertaken the respon- p.m. sibility of leading JACL, and regardless of what we may believe to be the major priorities and responsibilities of JACL in these times, let us give to Dave Ushio and his fellow staff executives the same kind of chance that we ourselves wanted 40, 30, and 20 be held on Sunday, March 11, years ago.

And also let us give them the membership and financial support that we also wanted a few decades chairman.

And this is the least that we, their parent generation in JACL, can grant them.

As this new JACL staff prepares itself for the in charge of arrangements of tremendous responsibilties that is theirs, the climate the dinner which attracted 80 of international tensions today between the land of members and guests. our citizenship and the country of our ancestry has a melancholy chill.

The devaluation of the American dollar a few weeks ago has highlighted the more than $4 billion imbalance in trade between the United States and Japan, reminding some that it was the so-called trade wars of the 1930s that escalated into the shooting war that became World War II.

There are those too who recall that American restrictions on trade with then Imperial Japan contributed to the Pacific showdown of 1941, a tragedy that proved beyond all doubt that the fortunes of those of Japanese origin in the United States are tied inextricably to the bilateral relationships that exist between Japan and the United States.

The Nisei experience—and obligation—therefore dictates that those of Japanese origin in this country must do all in our power to avoid serious confrontation and substantial deterioration of relations between the two Pacific nations that logically have more to suffer and lose in a trade war than any other two coun- urban development specialist tries on earth.

We will not repeat the awesome statistical documentation that evidences this situation. Suffice it to say that no two overseas nations have ever developed yama (San Francisco). the mutually advantageous and profitable two-way trade that Japan and the United States have over the past two decades.

While there are few who will argue that the 95815, passed away, Feb. 7. United States has lost much of its competitive edge in world trade and no longer enjoys an automatic monopoly in whatever it chooses to export, there is similar agreement that Japan has developed an effective system that limits imports and investments from other lands. Statistically Japan has taken significant steps to reduce its tariffs and nontariff barriers, but it has developed other means by which substantial trade in certain categories can be restricted. At the same times, the United States also must concede that it has nontariff impediments to the free flow of goods that do not identify a truly liberal trading nation.

As a starter, it seems that Japanese Americans must exert their not inconsiderable influence and know-how to try to persuade both countries to reach an understanding that will promote—and not discourage-mutually beneficial trade and other relations between Washington and Tokyo. For much more is at stake in preserving that relationship than merely the "acceptance" if you will of those of Japanese ancestry in the United States.
