The Leisure Boom

Tokyo Twenty-five years ago when I visited Japan there were many more bicycles than automobiles in the streets of Tokyo. Bicycles were an essential mode of transportation. Now bikes are gone from the streets and Tokyoites go to a cycling course and rent one for exercise and recreation. This, as much as anything, dramatizes the changes that have taken place in this nation.

Not many years ago the Japanese were so busy working they were reluctant to take a vacation even though time off with pay was provided by employers. This year, during a one-month period beginning July 21, the Japanese National Railways will operate 4,908 extra trains throughout the country, mainly to sea and mountain recreation areas. It is estimated some 20 million passengers will be riding the trains during this period.

Last year, persons seeking reserved seats waited all night at railroad stations before the start of selling for each train, the way Americans used to queue up for World Series tickets. This year they've eliminated the all-night lineups; people turn in applications and the tickets are distributed by lot with a limit of four seats per customer.

With such congestion, it is understandable that the big Tokyo and Osaka hotels are urging local residents to avoid overcrowded trains, highways and resort areas by spending their vacations at the hotels. The New Otani, for example, has a "Summer House Plan" which provides a week's accommodations for a family of four for 91,000 yen, which is about $300. This includes use of the swimming pool, but presumably meals and all else is extra.

Or if you'd like to live at home and commute to the hotel's swimming pool, admission is 2,500 yen (about $8.50) for adults on weekdays and 1,200 yen about $4) for children. On weekends the charge climbs to 3,500 yen (about $14) for adults and 2,000 yen (a bit less than $7) for children If you're really hooked on swimming, you might want to buy a season pass for 30,000 yen (about $100.)

In Osaka, the Royal Hotel invites you to take advantage of their Royal Summer Villa plan under which you get a room, two meals and use of the pool for 13,000 yen (just a bit under $45).

For those who want to get away from it all, the Japan Travel Bureau chartered the 23,500-ton liner Oriental Empress for an eight-day Hongkong cruise via Okinawa. One group of vacationers left Yokohama on July 17, flying back from Hongkong. A second group was to fly to Hongkong and sail back on the ship. Fare for he ocean portion ranges from $333 to $1,333, with the air fare presumably extra.

The Japanese have also discovered the pleasures of camping out although the term means something different than in the United States. All you need to take on a Japanese camping trip is a change of underwear and sox. Everything else-tent, campsite, bedding, meals, eating utensils — is provided. Public health officials see to it that all the camps have showers, kitchens and flush toilets. If you'd like to sample this kind of camping you'll have to wait until next year. Reservations for this summer are filled.

All this will give you an idea of what it's like to look for recreational opportunities in an overcrowded country in an era when the masses have both the time and money to enjoy their leisure. Someone once suggested that the Japanese government was opposed to a fiveday work week because it would give the people too much leisure time and there weren't enough facilities to take care of them all. And with the homes being so small, crowded and uncomfortable, too much leisure might lead to national unrest. Nonetheless, an increasing number of firms are switching from five and a half days to five days and the world-wide recession is hurrying this trend.

My room in the Pacific Hotel looked out over a double-decked golf driving range and the addicts were still hitting the balls late at night when I hit the sack. Will there be a third deck on the range the next time I visit Tokyo?

PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM

San Francisco Following the completion every year of the programs JACL sponsors for young people, each goes under some change and revision to hopefully improve the functioning of that program. We are now in the midst of revising the Presidential Classroom for Young Americans program, the National Scholarship program, and the Cultural Heritage Fellowship pro-gram. (The Student Aid, Graduate Scholarship, and Prime Minister Miki in sentimental JAYs programs will soon follow.) The JACL chapters that sponsored students to a homecoming in weekend visit of L.A. session of the Presidential Classroom for Young homecoming in weekend visit of L.A. WASHINGTON — Aside from the new influx of an expected 127,000 South Vietnamese immigration frem Asian countries into the United States consistently running ahead of Europe for the past 10 years. The predeminant Asian trend is expected to continue.

The Department of State, in an annual report from its visa office. said that European ccuntries. traditional source of new American citizens, received only 84,813 permanent visas in fiscal 1974 cempared with 117,090 in 1965.

At the same time, the number of permanent visas granted to Asian countries jumped from 15.186 in fiscal 1965 to 121,813 in fiscal 1974.

Non-immigrant visas — for tourism, business and such transients as foreign airline and ship crews - increased vious year.

"Immigration to the United States totaled 381,176, which is about 1 per cent higher than the fiscal 1973 total of 378,-117," Thomas M Recknagel, acting administrator of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs, said in a preface to the report issued in

"The growth of immigration was again due to primarily to the increase in the number of visas for immediate relatives of U.S. citizens. This minor increase in the total volume of immigration belies the geographic changes, which are characterized by increases for Asia, the Caribbean and Mexico, and by decreases for Europe and Canada."
