Reparations Program

Persistence in JACL is paying off. Six years ago, Edison Uno called for reparations for Japanese American evacuees as a form of redress for civil rights denied during World War II. This past week in Portland, he attended a meeting of the newly organized National JACL reparations campaign committee where he and Kaz Oshiki were consultants.

And as consultants, they helped to fashion details which are now being prepared for consideration by the JACL at its national convention in Sacramento June 22-26.

The campaign committee has agreed that reparations include compensation of $5,000 per person for those affected by Executive Order 9066 and $10 per diem for time spent in a detention camp. Eligibility of recipients and amount of payment required more discussion—and it is likely to take as long when the Japan continues to present inbasic plan and variations are presented at the Conven-

Plan II includes others who were affected by the same presidential order—such as Nikkei in the free zones whose constitutional rights were abrogated because of Evacuation, Nisei who were reclassified as 4-C by their draft board and conceivably many Japanese Americans in Hawaii and back East. Plan III allows Latin Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned by the U.S. government to file for reparations. other customer to be treated

The committee further recommended an "umbrella as courtecusly as the manageaward" be made and enable those who wish individual reparations be permitted to file, while the remainder of the award (because others do not choose to file) be ployees, as well as close ing their influences; for Japaturned over a trust fund for use by the Japanese friends, develop on a man- nese society itself has changed American nonprofit community organizations.

Mass Media in '42

Denver, Colo.

The April issue of The Quill, a monthly book, "Liberty and the News": magazine published by The Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi, carries an article of particular interest to Japanese Americans. It is titled "The Press Was an Accessory," and it tells how newspapers and radio fed the hysteria that led ultimately to the evacuation of Japanese Americans from the West Coast in 1942. The author is Ives Neely, described as a major in the U.S. Marine Corps at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Like many hallowed American institutions, the press is on a self-examination kick these days. It is likely that many young journalists, totally unfamiliar with the Japanese American story, will be stunned and saddened to learn how miserably the press failed its traditional responsibilities in this episode.

Japanese Americans themselves are only too familiar with Neely's revelations. He tells how the press trumpeted wild charges against Japanese Americans without question or challenge, how they accepted rumor fact, how they failed to put the news termarriage, and a recipe for into proper perspective.

"The mass media on the West Coast played a significant role in support of the evacuation," Neely writes. "The press consistently linked the U.S. citizens of Japanese descent with the Japanese enemy, helping to develop a negative sterectype of Japanese Americans. Only a few West Coast editors stressed civil rights. Many more, with the help of syndicated columnists, urged evacuation. But the press was not acting under the influence of any particular group. It was merely supportive of the overwhelming public mocd. Simply, there was fear of a Japanese air attack, and this led to fear of those racially identified wth the enemy nation."

Neely goes briefly into the long history of the West Coast press campaigns against the years since, virtually all the guilty Japan and the Japanese Americans. He newspapers have been able to rise to higher quotes a strangely prophetic passage by the levels of journalistic responsibility. journals. The book is the relate, respected Walter Lippmann in his 1920

"I can lie my head off, and if I choose the right series of lies, be entirely irresponsible. Nobody will punish me if I lie about Japan, for example. I can announce that every Japanese valet is a reservist and every Japanese art store a mobilization center. I am immune. And if there should be hostilities with Japan, the more I lied the more popular I should be.

"If I asserted that the Japanese secretly drank the blood of children, that Japanese women were unchaste, that the Japanese were really not a branch of the human race after all, I guarantee that most of the newspapers would print it eagerly, and that I could get a hearing in churches all over this country."

Neely points that while it was proper for the newspapers to report newsworthy statements from public officials hostile to the Japanese Americans, the press failed to provide equally prominent coverage to officials who said Evacuation was not necessary.

Those of us in the newspaper business today like to think that we are more rational, more judicious, more responsible than Nippon Express USA, Henry Oe the press was in 1942. But there is always the danger of the press, being the product of human endeavor, going off half-cocked on critical issues. Thus it is important to have magazines like The Quill remind professionals of grievous errors in the past.

As readers of this column know, I have long contended that a press acting responsibly, challenging and questioning and urging reason, could very well have prevented the tragedy of the Evacuation. Neely's article, while neither profound nor complete, lends support to this contention. The performance of the West Coast press in 1942 Mitsuiline Travel Service, Hiromichi Nakagaki was a sorry one. It is enccuraging that in
