What did Mike say? Confessing again he really was retired from the JACL battles back in 1972 after thirty years in the vineyards of public service for the cause of Japanese Americans, he told the National Council it was Reparations that brought him back. For it was at the emergency JACL conference just before the Evacuation in March, 1942, that while the decision to "cocperate" (under protest) in the Army's plan to remove 100,000 persons of Japanese ancestry from the west coast to inland concentration camps for the duration of the war, "at some appropriate time in the future, as then national president Saburo Kido promised, JACL would draft a bill of particulars and ask for full compensation". JACL's vow for Reparations, thus, goes back to the spring of 1942. Mike was firmly convinced because of the great capacity of Americans for honesty and justice with their commitment to freedom, the new program would be fulfilled.

The present, total deprecation of this film statement only shows our deep cultural defensiveness, a defensiveness which seems to conceal what should be our rage toward a society which would create the Evacuation, but which we are still incapable of hating.

To my mind, this present criticism serves very little constructive purpose. It serves to sever the relationship between those of experience and those with creative ability. It shows outsiders that we care more for creating a definitive mythology than for emphasizing what we truly are, a society of creative, energetic and intelligent individuals. Japanese America's would benefit more if we concentrated on what we know rather than on what professional critics see in other people's experiences.

The experiences and views of the Wakatsuki family may well have been unique among internees. To expect them to be either definitive or average is ridiculous, and their failure to be so are poor grounds for condemnation.

Pizza -- Japan style

Denver, Colo. Which of the many dozen Shakey's Pizza restaurants around the world brings in the most money? You would be right if you said: "The one on the third floor of a building in the Shunjuku area of Tokyo."

We must credit this bit of information to Jiro Takagi, the gray-haired president of Shakey's Japan Ltd., who was in town recently to confer with officials of the parent organization, Shakey's Inc., a subsidiary of a conglomerate known as Great Western United.

like, well, like whatever it is that sells in Japan like hotcakes, since the first Shakey's cutlet was opened in Tokyo three years ago. There are now 13 Shakey's restaurant in Japan (six in Tokyo, and the others stretched out from Sapporo in the north to them. Fukuoka in the south), with another scheduled to open in June and perhaps 14 more on the way.

But it isn't any ordinary businessman who can qualify for a Shakey's franchise. In the U.S., someone with $50,000 cash to invest and good bank credit would be a candidate for a franchise. In Japan, because of the sky-high cost of leasing a site, you'd need about $300,000 cash plus plenty of credit to even think of applying for a Shakey's franchise. So it isn't Ma and Pa, but a big company, that goes into business. Companies like a tractor dealer, and a Coke distributor, and the outfit that already has the Kentucky Fried Chicken franchise and wants to diversify.

It takes a bit of cash to even eat pizzas in Japan. The U.S. "single" size (which is called double in Japan) sells for about $1.65 on this side of the Pacific, but would cost about the equivalent of $2.65 in Tokyo.

featuring squid, is a big seller. Not far behind is the vegetable combination, with pimiento, onions, bell peppers and mushrooms. The ladies go for that one.

even sing along. Finding honky-tonk piano players in Japan was no problem, Takagi says, but lining up banjo players was something else. The first banjo-thumpers he hired was a couple Takagi revealed that pizzas are selling that had lived in New Orleans and learned Dixieland jazz there. Now, in anticipation of staffing those new pizza parlors, Shakey's Japan Ltd. has advertised for musicians anxious to learn the banjo and is in the process of setting up a free school for

That restaurant grosses something like $80,000 a month and everybody's smiling. Which would seem to prove that when in Tokyo, do like the Tokyoites do, particularly What kind of pizzas are most popular in if you're an American firm peddling an adaptation of an Italian favorite. Person-American combination, with all kinds of ally, if I were looking for a snack in Tokyo,

Young Japanese are the principal pizzaeaters, especially young women and schoolgirls. Gaggles of them troop in to the pizza parlors to listen to the traditional Shakey's honky-tonk piano and manjo music, and among three companies. The American Shakey's Inc., is half-owner, with a quarter interest each held by Mitsubishi and Kirin Beer. The U.S. Shakey's Inc. people are mighty happy, too, that they have Japanese partners with their knowhow. Some other American fast-food firms went into Japan and established outlets in suburban areas, just as they would back in the States. But the Shakey's people were told by their partners to pick city center sites, where the food action is, even though they had to settle for a basement or a third floor. When an American boss saw the third-floor Shakey's in Shinjuku he muttered, "We can't do business in a place like this," and almost went into shock.

CONVENTION DEBATE ON REPARATIONS

I had an opportunity this week in Sacramento during our National Convention to moderate a panel on the topic of Reparations for Japanese Americans who were evacuated and interned during World War II.

As I understand it, this is th first time that an open forum, free-wheeling, debate and discussion has been held by the National Council on Reparation.

Presentations were made by Henry Miyatake of the Seattle chapter, Ed Yamamoto, the temporary chairman of the Reparations Committee, Paul Tsuneishi, Gail and Tom Shimasaki, and Edison Uno and Mike Masaoka.

Many, perhaps 20 different speakers from the audience, rose to address the issues of Reparations. The intensity and breadth of the comments were evident. For example:

ing that he, Steve Doi, Floyd Shimomura and David from grade school to college Ushio attended with former Supreme Court Justice, affair. Arthur J. Goldberg.

Goldberg said that reparations was possible if fessor of urban studies at the ship winner was presented to uates banquet at the Brown 10-Kuwahara, Harry patterned after the Alaskan Native Claims Act (it passed Congress in the early 70's). He also said that a court case which could be adjudicated through the U.S. Court of Claims could also be an option.

(2) Rich Yamauchi and Tab Uno, both younger JACLers, spoke one after another in opposition to each other while presenting their personal reasons for proposing and opposing reparations.

(3) Mits Kawamoto questioning the methodology of the Seattle Plan and Shosuke Sasaki of Seattle defending their survey. Incidentally, Shosuke asked the National Council how many had heard the Seattle tape presentation and nearly all of the National Council responded affirmatively.

(4) Finally, Edison Uno and Mike Masaoka, so eloquently spoke about the development of the Reparations issue and the history of Evacuation.

The National Council voted unanimously to support the concept of Reparations. But, even more importantly, the issue of Reparations has become something that all JACLers and all Americans must come to recognize.
