Protests put 'Sanga Moyu' on shelf

LOS ANGELES — Protests from the Japanese American community have persuaded Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) to postpone the American showing of "Sanga Moyu," the corporation's major year-long series about the Kibei and Nisei during WW2.

Officials from NHK and United Television Broadcasting, distributors of the program, made a joint announcement at a press conference called March 19 in Little Tokyo.

Yoshimichi Otsuka, president of UTB-Japan, emphasized that "Sanga Moyu" has been postponed, not cancelled. No date for its future broadcast has been scheduled, however.

NHK received about 100 written complaints about the program from Japanese Americans, most charging that the book on which the series is based, Futatsu no

Sokoku, casts serious doubt on the loyalty of the Kibei and Nisei during the war.

Producers of the series have stressed that "Sanga Moyu"—episodes of which are still being filmed—differs significantly from the novel.

JACL Position

Media reports of the controversy, including a March 26 article in Newsweek, have assigned to JACL much of the responsibility for "Sanga Moyu's" postponement.

National JACL director Ron Wakabayashi, who met with series producer Susumu Kondo on March 9, reported that Kondo had recommended to NHK that the whole of "Sanga Moyu" be shown in Japan first. Then, officials could evaluate it from an American perspective.

Wakabayashi said that he had written NHK at the beginning of the year, stating that JACL had no formal position, but that members of the organization were con-

ADVOCATES—Sandra Gin Yep of Sacramento (left), award-winning television newscaster, and Gen. Dewey K. Yep and Lowe were among the conference speakers.

News in Brief

Teacher claims he killed Chinese woman because of 'fear of Asians'

NEW YORK—John Cardinale, 39-year-old public school teacher, pushed a young Chinese woman into an on-rushing subway train because "he has a psychotic phobia about Orientals," said his attorney. Martin Geduldig told reporters that his client experienced "certain problems" while he was a Peace Corps volunteer in Thailand from 1972 to 1974.

Ly Yung Cheung, 19, was waiting for a subway train in Chinatown after her day's work at a garment factory. She had been in the country about 4 months with her husband of 10 months.

Cardinale's school district was initiating disciplinary proceedings that could have resulted in his dismissal. Witnesses said Cardinale was swearing at the board of education before pushing Cheung and shouted "We're even!" as she fell to her death.

L.A. employees should file yearly

LOS ANGELES—Supervisor Kenneth Hahn reminded former Japanese American employees of Los Angeles County government who qualify for compensation because they were discharged at the outbreak of WW2 that they need to re-apply each year.

Under Hahn's leadership, Los Angeles County was the first in the nation to undertake a compensation program for former Nisei employees. "To be sure," Hahn said, "the $1,250 [per year] is hardly enough to compensate those who were victimized for the financial and emotional cost of this experience. But it is an important symbol to all Americans."

Questions about the program may be directed to the county's personnel office, 974-2613.

Asian delegates for Jackson chosen

LOS ANGELES—Several Asian Americans were elected March 11 as candidates for placement on the June California primary ballot as delegates for Jesse Jackson. Results from the advisory caucuses, held in all 45 congressional districts, will guide the Jackson campaign in selecting his delegates.

Among the candidates selected in Los Angeles were Sue Embrey, Irene Hirano, Bruce Iwasaki, Bert Nakano, and Craig Wong. San Francisco Bay Area candidates include Julie Hatta, Patty Hirota, Victor Hsi, Ying Lee Kelley, Donna Kotake, Cynthia Ong, Michael Pon, and Mabel Teng.

Mineta's House leadership noted

WASHINGTON—A Wall Street Journal study on statecraft in the House of Representatives, in comparing the two huge Democratic blocs from New York and California, noted last week (Mar. 23) that Rep. Norman Mineta "retains a foothold in the leadership, and he may make a bid for the chairmanship of the House Democratic Caucus."

California's 45 members have influence because they generally work together—a legacy of the late Phillip Burton of San Francisco. Rep. Robert Matsui told the Journal that he remembers Burton as the "conscience"—and whip—of the Democratic delegation.

Holocaust panel criticizes American Jewish leadership

NEW YORK—American Jewish organizations could have saved "tens of thousands" of European Jews from the Nazi extermination camps if they had taken more aggressive measures, said a private American commission.

American Jews failed to do more because they were hampered by internal struggles, were fearful of antagonizing President Franklin Roosevelt and of stirring up anti-Semitic backlash, were unwilling to pay bribes or use other illegal means to rescue victims of the Holocaust, and believed that U.S. and British governments would exert themselves to help save Jews.

Those conclusions, to be issued in a 300-page report due April 11, are the result of more than two years' study by the American Jewish Commission on the Holocaust. Chaired by former U.S. Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg, it comprises 34 prominent Jewish Americans aided by 14 scholars.

In an interview with Los Angeles Times reporter Bob Drogin, Goldberg noted, however, that the American Jewish organizations in the 1930s and 1940s were relatively small and had little political clout or money. He blamed President Roosevelt and other leaders for imposing immigration policies that blocked the admission of European Jews and for refusing to aid Holocaust victims until 1944.

(It has been widely reported that John McCloy, then-assistant secretary of war, was the person who advised Roosevelt to reject the pleas of American Jewish leaders to bomb the gas chambers at Auschwitz and rail lines leading to death camps.)

Quiet Diplomacy 'Led Nowhere'

The author of the report, Prof. Seymour Maxwell Finger of the Graduate School of City Univ. of New York, said that "upper-class" American Jewish leaders felt they had to use quiet, behind-the-scenes diplomacy to rescue the European Jews. This prodding "was in essence leading nowhere," Finger stated. "They might have saved tens of thousands more if they'd been less cautious, more willing to use extra-legal means."

But paying bribes to Nazis or sending food would have violated trading-with-the-enemy laws. "By and large, they saw themselves as patriotic Americans, completely devoted to President Roosevelt, and they would not do anything to break a law or interfere with the war effort," Finger said.

Report Attacked from 2 Sides

Jewish leaders have already assailed the commission's report. Will Maslow, general counsel of the American Jewish Congress and its former executive director, said the question of paying bribes was "nonsense," given the magnitude of the

Yasui files notice of appeal

PORTLAND, Ore.—Peggy Nagae, attorney for Minoru Yasui, filed on Mar. 2 a notice of appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in San Francisco in the case of Minoru Yasui vs. United States of America.

Yasui is appealing the Jan. 26 decision of U.S. District Court Judge Robert Belloni, which granted the government's motion to dismiss Yasui's petition for a writ of error coram nobis. The petition charges that there was no military necessity for the curfew, exclusion, and internment of Japanese Americans during WW2, and that the government knew this but suppressed and destroyed evidence to obtain convictions in the three Supreme Court cases of Yasui, Hirabayashi, and Korematsu.

Belloni did vacate Yasui's 1942 conviction for violating military curfew orders in Portland, and further dismissed the indictment under which he was charged. Attorneys for Yasui and the Justice Dept. had both requested these actions from the court. The government, however, also moved to dismiss Yasui's petition.

Belloni ruled in favor of the government, stating, "There is no case or controversy since both sides are asking for the same relief for different reasons. The Petitioner [Yasui] would have the court engage in fact-finding which would have no legal consequences. Courts should not engage in that kind of activity."

Yasui, on the other hand, believes that the government's failure to answer the petition's allegations is tantamount to an

EAST WIND: by Bill Marutani

For Just Three Pennies

Philadelphia
THERE ARE ABOUT 750,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry in the United States. Looking at the total of some 220 million Americans altogether, that number doesn't sound like much. How much influence can less than one-half of one percent of the people have, and what contribution could they possibly make?

ONE OF THE principal means in forging our destiny and helping to shape our society is through political power. From the scant knowledge that we have, we conclude that there are three ingredients leading to such power: (a) ability to produce votes, (b) financial resources, i.e. money, and (c) control of the party machinery. From this neophyte's perspective, this last ingredient can, in many situations, become inconsequential by being overcome by use of the mass media which by-passes party machinery. So if a candidate, or cause, has access to a generous war-chest, the potential for success is greatly enhanced. With money one can reach the voters directly through television; with money one can hire an army of workers; with money, voters' views can be influenced. Not always, but everything else being equal, a bulging treasury can do wonders.

So it follows that if one had a choice of only one of the three ingredients, finances (money) may be the most advantageous choice.

NOW, GETTING BACK to those three-quarter million Nikkei. If, on a per capita basis, the Nikkei contributed to a common pool a sum of just three cents a day for one year, at the end of 365 days there would be amassed a fund of over $8 million dollars! Yes, for only three pennies a day per person. Make available to a campaign director a fund of $8 million and (s)he'll ask you to name your objective "and it'll be done."

INASMUCH AS NIKKEI, at least those on the Mainland, cannot lay claim to being able to produce a large bloc of votes (except in some limited spots) and generally do not have control of party machinery, there remains the third ingredient: financing. This should be one of the principal focuses for the Nikkei in order to participate in the political process. (We hasten to add that the Nikkei should not hesitate to run for political office. Do so. This society could sorely use some of the cultural values that you can bring to a public office.)

THERE IS SOMETHING in the Nikkei's cultural psyche that leads him/her to believe that "right will triumph"—eventually; that in the meantime, we need to be patient even as wrong reigns. We're not sure when that millennium of "eventually" is to dawn upon civilization, but of one thing we are certain: we, all of us, are on this trip but a brief time and then it will be gone. "Eventually" should be in our own lifetime; there should be no reason why it should not be so.

SO, FOR JUST three pennies a day per capita, we have the magnificent potential to make a difference. For just three pennies. #

REDRESS PHASE FIVE: Minoru Yasui

The Deep South

Denver, Colo.
The Confederate States of the Deep South numbered 13 during the Civil War (1861-1865). The South has 129 members in the U.S. House and 26 senators, roughly one-third of the House and one-fourth of the Senate. Without significant Southern support, redress cannot succeed in Congress.

Our contacts are limited. Sen. Jeremiah Denton (R-Ala.) came on as a co-sponsor of S 2116. Twelve states of the South (all except Florida) will hold elections for Senate seats this year. Democrats and Republicans hold six seats apiece. All of the Democrats seem safe for re-election, but four or five of the Republican seats may be taken over by Democrats — which could mean that power in the U.S. Senate would shift from Republican leadership to the Democrats. If such a shift takes place, it could also mean a boost in chances for favorable consideration of redress in the 99th Congress.

Because both Missouri and Texas have JACL chapters, and since we discussed Virginia as an Eastern seaboard state and will be discussing Oklahoma as a Great Plains state, we will cover only 10 states of the Deep South, plus West Virginia, in this column.

ALABAMA: Sen. Howell Heflin (D) is up for re-election this year, but having won by 94% in 1978, he seems safe enough in 1984. The junior senator, Jeremiah Denton (R), is retired rear admiral, and was a POW in Vietnam who blinked out "torture" in Morse code with his eyes when forced before newsreel cameras as a prisoner. Alabama has seven congressional representatives.

We knew the Tom Sawada family in Mobile during the early 1950s, when JACL was involved in the naturalization drive for Issei, but we've lost touch. We need help in contacting Alabama's congressional delegation.

ARKANSAS: The senators of Arkansas are two former governors. Sen. Dale Bumpers (D) is far removed from the segregationist policies of a Gov. Orval Faubus, but is not the inter-nationalist as was Sen. William Fulbright. Junior senator David Pryor (D) is up for re-election in 1984. Interestingly, his father was a personnel officer at the Rohwer WRA camp in the early 1940s, and Sen. Pryor remembers visiting the camp as a young boy. Arkansas' four representatives could be helpful to redress.

There appears to be a small scattering of Nikkei in the Little Rock area who have recently moved to that area. In Little Rock, Sam Yada is well known for his spearheading the dedication of a memorial in 1982 at the Rohwer campsite.

FLORIDA: As a premier sun-belt state, Florida could become the fourth most populous state in the United States, behind California, New York, and Texas. Sen. Lawton Chiles (D) is ranking minority member of the Senate budget committee, as well as third ranking in the Senate governmental affairs committee, to which S 2116 has been assigned. Sen. Paula Hawkins (R) is the other senator from Florida, and she squeaked through the 1980 elections by a 53%-48% margin. As a Mormon from Salt Lake City, she might be reached by Nikkei Mormons?

Florida's 19 members of Congress are a significant bloc of votes. We know that Ray Kitayama, who moved his nursery business from Colorado several years ago, is now in the Miami area, and could be very helpful.

Representatives Claude Pepper, 83, Dante Fascell, 67, and William Lehman, 70, all of the Miami area, together with Rep. Charles Bennett, 73, of Jacksonville, would remember WWII years, and would be aware of the contributions of Nisei GI's of that period.

GEORGIA: Sen. Sam Nunn (D) is up for re-election in 1984, but in view of his 83%-17% romp in 1978, his seat seems safe. Nunn is the ranking minority member of the Senate Governmental Affairs committee, which will be holding hearings on S 2116. Sen. Matt Mattingly (R) squeaked through in 1980 by a hair-breadth's 51%-49%, and is ranked as a Reagan conservative.

Georgia's 10 representatives are an important bloc of votes, especially in the Atlanta area. Though there are a number of Japanese corporate interests in Atlanta, we do not have any contacts with Nikkei in Georgia. Please send us names, addresses and telephone numbers of friends or relatives in Georgia.

KENTUCKY: Sen. Walter Huddleston (D) comes up for re-election in 1984, and his 61%-37% victory in 1978 indicates he would have no troubles in 1984. Sen. Wendell Ford (D) is ranking minority member of the Senate Rules committee, and with his liberal background, could be helpful to redress. Of Kentucky's seven representatives, Romano Mazzoli (D) of Louisville, is probably best known for his work on the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill.

Again, we do not have any direct contacts in Kentucky, as would assist with the redress effort. Please send us names, addresses and telephone numbers.

LOUISIANA: Sen. Russell Long (D) is the second most senior member of the Senate, having been first elected in 1948. He was Democratic majority whip in 1965, and chaired the Senate finance committee, until he had to relinquish that post to Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) in 1982. He would be a powerful figure in a Democratic-controlled Senate. The other senator, Bennett Johnston (D), is eighth ranking minority member of the Senate appropriations committee, and is up for re-election in 1984.

Eight members in Congress are from Louisiana. We know of James Yenari in New Orleans, who was a watchmaker-jeweler, but because of crippling injuries, he is no longer very active. We also understand that there is an older Nisei, James Imamura, who operates a nursery in the Baton Rouge area, but we do not have close contacts with Nikkei in Louisiana.

MISSISSIPPI: Sen. John Stennis (D) is the oldest member of the Senate, at the age of 82. He was first elected in 1947, and has been ranking member of the Senate Appropriations committee, and will be a powerful figure if the Democrats regain control of the Senate. Sen. Thad Cochran (R) became a U.S. senator mostly because of a three-way race, with only 45% of the total vote, because Charles Evers drew off 23% of the votes from the regular Democratic candidate. He is up for re-election in 1984, and if the Democrats put their house in order in Mississippi, there will be another Democratic senator from that state in 1984.

We know that the 442nd Regiment trained at Hattiesburg, and we keep wondering what our contacts could be. Rep. Jamies Whitten (D) has been in Congress since 1941, and is chair of the House Appropriations committee. He should be well aware of the exploits of the 442nd RCT. Rep. Trent Lott (R) is Republican minority whip in the House. The other three Congressmen from Mississippi also need to be contacted.

NORTH CAROLINA: Sen. Jesse Helms (R), the ultra-conservative, is up for re-election in 1984. It is reported that popular former Gov. James Hunt (D) is out to oust Helms. Helms is a big money-raiser for the New Right, reportedly having raised $10 million in 1972 to aid Republican conservatives. He will not be easy to beat. Sen. John East (R) is a conservative mate of Helms, and sits seventh on the Senate judiciary committee. The 11 representatives in the House from North Carolina constitute another significant bloc, and need to be cultivated.

We have a young nephew, Robert Yasui, in the Triangle area of Greensboro-Winston-Salem and High Point area of North Carolina, but know of no other Nikkei in North Carolina.

FROM THE FRYING PAN: by Bill Hosokawa

Denver, Colo.

The Shiga family lived on the corner of 18th and Weller streets when we were kids in Seattle. I don't know where they came from or how long they had lived in that corner house, but I think we were already in the neighborhood when they arrived.

There were Pop and Mom Shiga and five kids, Yoshiko, Michiko, Sakiko, Andy and Mayko in order of seniority. Pop Shiga drove a Packard at a time when almost everyone else rode street cars or had Chevies or Fords. I have no idea where he got the money although he did run a knit goods store on Jackson street with machinery in the back where they manufactured sweaters and wool socks and things like that.

Pop Shiga was a splendid cook. I don't know where or how he learned, but he used to whomp up great platters of excellent chow mein and roast duck. He ate well and enjoyed living well.

The Shigas of Seattle

After we left the neighborhood we sort of lost touch although the Shigas continued to live in the house. I think Mrs. Shiga died about this time, and Pop Shiga went alone to Japan for a while. My recollection is that when war came the Shiga family headed for Montana, Helena, I think it was, where they had friends, and thus escaped the trauma of evacuation and camp life.

More recently, every now and then I'd hear bits and pieces about the Shiga family. Yoshiko is still living in Seattle, as is Andy who has prospered as a businessman and real estate investor in the University district. Someone referred to him as the "mayor" of the district and once, when we visited his store, he showed us around the area with obvious pride.

Michiko is widowed and living in Florida where she went to see whether the climate would help her husband's allergies, or maybe it was asthma, I've forgotten which. Mayko, the youngest, lived in Madison, Wis., and the first of the siblings to die. She was a nurse and once she dropped in on us when she came to Denver for a professional meeting.

Back in the fall of '82 I happened to be in Washington, D.C., when I heard that Sakiko, who lived in nearby Kensington, was ill. Her husband, Bill Himel, said she would enjoy seeing me, so I dropped by for a few minutes.

It was the first time I'd seen her since the war. Nearly 40 years had passed, but she was still a very attractive woman. She said she had been stricken by the Big C back in 1974, had made an excellent recovery, but it had come back again and it didn't look very good for her. We tried to have a good visit, and I think we succeeded.

A few weeks ago I was in Washington again and Etsu Masaoka, providing transportation from one meeting to another, brought word that Sakiko had died the night before. For her it was surcease from pain and suffering.

But suddenly I became aware of the swift passage of time, and felt a sense of loss which I knew I shared with her family and friends. #

Veteran JACL bowlers recognized at national tournament in San Jose

By PHIL MATSUMURA

SAN JOSE, Calif. — New records by the winning T&J Appliance teams, in men's doubles by Art Nish and Tony Figuiera and a sensational one-man performance by 19-year-old Figuiera of Hawaii highlighted the week-long 10th annual Japanese American National Bowling Assn. tournament, which concluded March 10 with 204 teams and more than 1,000 bowlers participating. The successful event was sponsored by San Jose Nisei Bowling Assn.

At the awards banquet attended by some 500 at the San Jose Hyatt, new JANBA officers began their three-year terms. They are:

Ozzie Shimada, Watsonville, Calif. pres.; Yuji Okumura, Salt Lake City, men's vice pres.; Jean Sunada, Golden, Colo., women's vice pres.; Gish Endo, San Francisco, treas.; and Alice Inami, San Jose, sec.

Appreciation was expressed to outgoing president Wat Misaka for his six years of leadership.

Predecessor JACL Tournament

The tournament paid its respects to the late Jitsuo "Maki" Kaizumi of Salt Lake City, who died last November. Kaizumi was a pioneer in the world of Nikkei bowling and was instrumental in starting the Intermountain Nisei tournament, which became the National JACL tournament in 1947. He chaired the first national tournament and took leading roles in the two other national events in Salt Lake City.

The National JACL tournament was discontinued in 1974 and the new JANBA was organized the same year.

Veteran bowlers who bowled in the first National JACL tourney in 1947 and who have participated regularly in the following years were recognized. They were:

Eiko Nomura, Los Angeles; Jun Kurumada, Salt Lake City; Takeshi Mayeda, Denver; Ed Tsuruda, Los Angeles; Shozo Hiramizu, Los An-

SOUTH CAROLINA: Sen. Strom Thurmond (R) at age 81 is still a power to be respected; if he decides to run for re-election in 1984, he probably would be successful. He heads the Senate judiciary committee, and as such, could have an effect upon any redress legislation. The other senator from South Carolina is Ernest Hollings (D), important as second ranking minority member of the Budget committee, and fifth ranking minority member of the Appropriations committee. The six Congressmen from South Carolina also need to be courted in regard to redress. We have no contacts in South Carolina.

TENNESSEE: Senate majority leader Howard Baker (R) has announced his retirement in 1984, and his seat seemingly will be taken over by the Democrats. Sen. James Sasser (D) is fifth on Budget, sixth on Governmental Affairs, and ninth on Appropriations committees. If the Democrats win a majority, he will be important in any consideration of redress legislation. Among the nine representatives from Tennessee, Rep. Albert Gore Jr. (D) of the central Cumberland plateau, should be a supporter of redress, given his background.

We know Dr. Roy Yamahiro of Memphis. He is vice-president for development at the Federal Express Corp. However, he tells us that the Japanese in the Memphis area are almost all from Japan as corporation employees, as are the Japanese management types at the new Nissan Motors factory in Tennessee.

We need contacts in the Nashville area, which is the home base of Sen. James Sasser.

WEST VIRGINIA: West Virginia was not a part of the Southern Confederacy, having broken off from Virginia during the Civil War. Although Sen. Jennis Randolph (D) age 81, has been serving since 1932, he is retiring in 1984. Undoubtedly, his seat will be taken by another Democrat.

The other West Virginia senator, Sen. Robert Byrd (D) was relegated to the position of minority leader when the Republicans took over in 1982. However, if, as indicated, the Democrats resume control of the U.S. Senate in the 99th Congress, Byrd will be influential as majority leader, second of Appropriations and third on Judiciary committees.

With Gov. John D. (Jay) Rockefeller IV (D) who went to West Virginia originally as an anti-poverty worker, and with four Democratic representatives, West Virginia could give redress a boost — but we have no contacts in that state.

* * *

We are looking at 129 House seats and 26 Senate votes from the Deep South in the Congress of the United States. We need to inform those representatives and senators about the U.S. Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians report and recommendations, and persuade at least 65 Southern representatives and 14 Southern senators to aid in our redress drive. Who can help us in the Deep South? Please send us names, addresses, and telephone numbers.

Part Three of a Five Part Series

Applying for Scholarships?

San Francisco

JACL's 1984 national scholarship program is under way. During the last few months, national headquarters has received over one thousand requests for information and applications. This is a clear indicator that financial aid for education is important for students and our Japanese American communities.

I would like to offer some suggestions to students applying for scholarships and financial aid. These suggestions come from JACL chapters, regional offices and my own observations of the National JACL scholarship program.

1. When requesting information and an application, YOU, the student and hopeful recipient of the award should be the one to make the request. Don't have your mother, brother or friend request the information. YOU should. If you don't have the time to ask, why bother to apply?

2. Read the application procedures carefully. When a "self-addressed, stamped envelope" is requested to obtain an application, send one. When it says "print or type," make sure your application is legible. In the JACL scholarship program, a number of potential recipients fail to receive awards, because the committee cannot read the application. Also, make sure your application is complete. Those that are not completed are not even considered.

3. Should you decide to apply and you ask someone to submit a "letter of reference," you had better send in an application. Each year we receive letters of reference (each of which a person spent time to write), only to find no application that accompanies the letter. Also, tell your reference when the letter must be submitted. We receive many letters of reference past the application due date, thus making your application incomplete and not eligible for an award.

I hope these suggestions are helpful to applicants of scholarship and financial aid programs. Remember, there are only 40 awards in five categories, and the applicants overall are in the top percentile of American students. The competition for awards is difficult enough without missing your chance on a technical error. #

A Kotani Sequel

Los Angeles
A major "feedback" to this series comes from Tom Masamori, freelance Denver photographer, who was fascinated by Bob Okazaki's story (No. 9 of this series) on the first Issei movie cameraman in the early years of Hollywood, Henry Kotani, his uncle on his mother's side. It's "major" since two photographs from his mother's family album were sent to us. [Tom doesn't expect to see these in print but probably this is the first time Kotani's picture has ever been published in the Nikkei media: (1) the large shot shows a Japanese baseball team ("A" for Asahi?) with the "x" indicating where Kotani is shown in front and which was posted from Los Angeles Feb. 19, 1914, to his sister, Chiyo Oka, who was living in Pescadero, Ca.; and (2) a full-length picture inscribed to his "little sister" and dated July 23, 1913.]

Henry K. Kotani

Included in the Masamori package was an interesting newspaper clipping from the Honolulu Advertiser (Apr. 27, 1982) about his mother Chiyoko Masamori, then 82, of Sunnyvale, Ca., who had met her older sister Sawano Terada, 87, of Palolo Valley for the first time after 82 years—in Honolulu. Written by Advertiser's popular human-interest columnist Bob Krauss, the reunion with all the children on both sides also present, the two sisters were hardly able to get a word in edgewise. It was pegged as "the happiest mix-up in Honolulu history." How come the two sisters were meeting for the first time is explained in this way. Her father and mother had other children before they moved from Japan to Hawaii, where the family operated a hotel in Honokaa (Big Island) about 1900. Tom, who has been trying for years to establish the fact that her mother was born in Hawaii (the records in Hawaii do not show it, so he's seeking leads for a reliable witness at this late date to testify Chiyoko was born on the Big Island), said his mother remembers a few things that somebody told her: "One is that as a very small child, perhaps a few months old, she was given to a family named Oka at Honokaa because her mother had died (of childbirth)... Her family name was Kotani.

"The Okas took mother to Japan. At age 3, they brought her back to Hawaii and at age 6 took her to San Francisco. In San Francisco, mother's brother Henry Kotani recognized her on the street and asked, 'Are you, Chiyoko?' It was the only time they met." The meeting took place at the hotel where newly-arrived Japanese from Hawaii and Japan would stay. That's how she knew she had brothers and sisters. According to Tom, Henry knew of Chiyoko as he was the oldest of the Kotani children and since he couldn't get along with his stepmother, left for San Francisco to go to school and evidently put himself through as a houseboy. But there is another version to the story, Tom continued. "The Okas cut off all contact because they didn't want to lose their adopted daughter. They had taken out a birth certificate in Japan." [At this point, can someone tell us whether the family register—Koseki—also designates the birthplace of those entered, if born overseas?]

As years went by, Sawano in Honolulu knew she had a younger sister who had been adopted but had no idea where she was or whether she was still alive. And each time Tom visited Honolulu for a 442nd reunion, he tried to locate the Kotani sister, but knew it would be difficult as she had married. Tom also heard her mother's brother had gone into films in Hollywood and then went to Japan.

In the spring of '82, Tom's brother Harold was visiting in Japan and while talking to a cousin in Hiroshima, where the name Henry Kotani came up. His cousin, a movie buff, recognized the name. She helped Harold to meet with Henry's widow in Tokyo, who gave him the address of Henry's sister (Sawano) in Hawaii. Harold stopped in Honolulu on the way back and found the Terada family in Palolo Valley. A week later Tom was notified, who decided to take his mother to Hawaii to meet her sister as soon as possible. "We didn't want to wait."

Tom said Henry Kotani and his mother exchanged letters, but they never met again. The two photos are the only mementos of her older brother of those days. She did not hear from him after he returned to Japan.

More Feedback—This episode was entirely unexpected for the Little Tokyo Life series—thanks to Tom Masamori. He was hoping Bob Okazaki (he must be in or is pushing the 80s) can help him... Our Tokyo contributor of years past—Mas Manbo, who says some nice things about the series and the Issei-English (Nichibei-go) lists, wonders if a sample of the hilarious Kichizaemon columns written in broken English in the Rafu Shimpo of the 1930s might be reprinted in the PC. He thinks most Nikkei would most likely have fits seeing it back in print. We'll find something—for these columns were a part of Little Tokyo Life the high-school-age Nisei of that era should remember. #

The following discussion is excerpted from the Jan. 28 Japan Times Weekly:

When is a foreigner not a foreigner? That is a question many Americans of Japanese ancestry come to ask themselves after living in Japan for some time. Problems might start with small incidents. On a train, they might get looked at suspiciously by Japanese persons who fail to realize that they are foreign and presume that they are showing off their fluency in English.

Bigger obstacles lie ahead. There have been cases of English-language schools refusing employment to Japanese Americans on the grounds that their students want to be taught by "genuine," that is, white Americans. Companies in other fields might be more willing to hire Japanese Americans for their abilities, but problems still crop up.

Norihiko Shirouzu of the Japan Times Weekly talked with three Japanese Americans living in Japan. Mayumi Nishi, 23, from San Francisco, Calif., has been in Japan for two years and is an English teacher in Tokyo. Michael Uehara, 26, works as a writer in Tokyo, and Sachi Natori, 32, is an announcer for an English-language TV station in Tokyo. Natori is married to a Japanese and has lived in Tokyo for 6 years.

'Genuine Americans'

Uehara: I think the expression "genuine American" is a Japanese one. It is a distinction that the Japanese make about Americans, but which Americans don't make about themselves. [Japanese] have a conception of what America is. You can see it in the advertising... all these blond-haired, blue-eyed people. That's what the Japanese mean by "genuine Americans."

It is an aggravating distinction. It is purely Japanese.

Nishi: I think genuine Americans are American Indians. What makes America what it is, is the fact that there are people from all over the world, from Asian countries and European countries. In a way it is sad that Japanese people are not aware that there are Asians, Blacks and Europeans who are Americans. It is superficial and limited to look at white Americans as the only Americans.

Problems

Natori: They expect you to be able to speak Japanese at first—"they" being people who you really don't know.

I had one crushing experience. I had been here about six months. I was in Ueno station, and I couldn't get around that station, and it was getting late, and the station was so big, and I didn't know what I was doing. So I went up and said in my terrible Japanese, "Shibuya wa doko desu ka?" And the station attendant was mad. He pointed up to a sign and said "Baka!" I couldn't get all that he said, but it was to the fact that I was stupid because I couldn't read kanji. They don't understand why you can't speak Japanese.

Of course, I love it here and I love Japanese people. But Japanese, generally speaking, are pretty selfish, all the way up to politicians, because they have that isolationist background. They can't get out of that. They want you to conform to the Japanese way. How many times have I heard someone say, "This is the Japanese way"? I say, "Wait a minute. We are in the world. We aren't Americans, we aren't British, we aren't Japanese. We are people." That's what I want to stress.

Ways of Thinking

Uehara: According to Japanese people's image of us, we think like them. But I don't think like Japanese.

Natori: The environment we grew up in is different. No matter how hard I try to think like a Japanese, it just doesn't come out that way naturally.

The culture here is really hard. Some of the things the Japanese do, I can't understand it. For example, the gift-giving. I think it's nice to give o-seibo and o-chugen to people who have done something for you in the past. But I think—I might be wrong—but I think sometimes the Japanese use it to say "Please remember me next year when I call on you." It's kind of obligating. I don't want that, you know. I always like it when it means "Thank you for helping me in the past. I don't want anything from you in the future, but thank you for your help in the past." I don't like the yoroshiku in the future part.

Nishi: I think it is ridiculous to say that a Japanese American's way of thinking is similar to that of a Japanese. Japanese Americans are Americans. And Americans are quite independent when it comes to giving their own answers and responses. My way of thinking is my own individual way of thinking.

Experiences

Uehara: For me, the triumph really comes when somebody looks at me as a person. You realize that you are not really satisfied being stereotyped. And I have learned that Japanese people are individuals too. Because of social pressures, they accept stereotypes, as opposed to looking at individuals. Because the pressure is so great, they have to. But a lot of them still care. They look at me as an individual.

In relations with people here on a personal level, they really don't know who I am. So they struggle to put me into a box. Because of that, they watch me very carefully. They watch to see how I react to a situation. If you are a white American, they just watch how you fit in. But they have to watch me carefully. Therefore, I have developed very good relations with Japanese. They have told me that they have to watch me as a person, as opposed to watching me just as a foreigner. That is an advantage. In general, I have a better chance of being perceived as a person than a white American does.

Natori: The people that I work with have accepted me as a kind of unique person with no country of [my] own. You're maybe floating out, like Hawaii, somewhere between the two countries. They treat you as a very special person. And that's one of the positive things I have found about being a Sansei here. I'm treated as a little queen sometimes. People are so kind to me. They don't think you're a barbarian blue-eyed blond. They like the little mix between American and Japanese. They like that mixed-up little person, you know.

And a lot of people ask me about the concentration camps, you know, "Were your mother and father there, or your grandparents?" And then they really feel that you're a part of their blood. So there are a lot of wonderful relations that you have here with people.

I think that the Japanese, generally speaking, still have a long way to go from the isolation period and that type of attitude. They have got to really open up and accept people for what they are, instead of making everyone conform to Japanese ways. A lot of Japanese thinking is great, but a lot of it is still backward. They have got to accept people more, and not try to recreate them. #

When in Rome . . .

In response to the discussion among Sansei (see page 8), the Japan Times Weekly published the following letter on Feb. 18:

As an American of Japanese ancestry, I expected to find your Jan. 28 article on Japanese Americans to be interesting and informative. However, I was disappointed (as well as amused in retrospect) by the comments made by Mrs. Natori, Miss Nishi and Mr. Uehara on the trials and tribulations of being a Japanese American in Japan.

First of all, I find it difficult to sympathize with the statement, "They (meaning the Japanese) expect you (Japanese Americans) to be able to speak Japanese—they being people who you really don't know."

I think it is unrealistic to expect the average Japanese who does not come into direct contact with Americans on a regular basis to be able to tell that the Asian face he/she is seeing for the first time carries an American passport.

Mrs. Natori also states that the Japanese don't understand why Japanese Americans can't speak Japanese when they look Japanese. The answer is because this is Japan: Japanese Americans look Japanese and the Japanese don't know any better. The Japanese reach the only conclusion they are capable of reaching.

Finally, regarding Mrs. Natori's comment of Japanese being, generally speaking, selfish because of an isolationist background is an inaccurate and dangerous generalization to make because it is not based on fact. I think it is very fine what she stresses—"We are in the world. We aren't Japanese. We aren't British. We aren't Americans. We are people."—in response to the Japanese desire to make foreigners conform to the Japanese way. What she says may be true, but although we are in the world, we are also in Japan. I think this point should be remembered by all foreigners.

If a survey of Japanese Americans in Japan were conducted, a certain degree of dissatisfaction with how they are perceived by the Japanese would no doubt be found, as Mr. Uehara states. My belief is that the dissatisfaction on the part of the Japanese American probably stems from not having certain expectations fulfilled.

I think that, unlike their white American counterparts, Japanese Americans are more susceptible in this regard. However, unless these expectations are tempered with a certain degree of awareness and realism, frustrations and disappointments will occur.

Contrary to what Miss Nishi says, I don't think it is ridiculous to say that a Japanese American's thinking is similar to that of a Japanese. The history of Japanese Americans in the U.S. is not that long and the cultural behavior patterns, attitudes and customs which were passed down by the first, second and, perhaps by now, third generations are a part of young Japanese Americans today. This does not mean that Japanese Americans and Japanese can understand each other completely. There are just some points of similarity.

In my experience I have found that the Japanese Americans in Hawaii and California adhere more strongly to certain traditional customs long discarded by their counterparts in Tokyo.

Finally, Miss Nishi's statement—"Americans are quite independent when it comes to giving their own answers and responses."—is a well-worn generalization that is often mentioned to illustrate how different Americans are from the Japanese. There are many exceptions to this rule in the U.S. but Americans tend to forget this when they are in a foreign country.

As a Japanese American and as a fluent speaker of Japanese, I have encountered my share of misunderstandings. While I have been told that I am not a "real American," I have also encountered surprised looks because the Japanese did not expect me to be able to speak Japanese so well. Such incidents can become irritating after a while if I let them bother me.

However, I have experienced being mistaken for everything from Japanese to Korean while I was growing up in the U.S., Europe and Asia. I have been asked by my fellow Americans (in as well as outside of the U.S.) why I spoke English "so well"—sometimes there are Americans who cannot tell who is American just by looking. Frankly, I find this to be much more irritating than being mistaken for a Japanese by the Japanese. I feel this way because at least Americans should know better that there are all kinds of Americans.

admission of error. Hence, Yasui feels the judge should have granted his petition.

All 3 Cases May Be Appealed

Although District Court Judge Marilyn Hall Patel granted Fred Korematsu's similar petition for a writ of error coram nobis last Nov. 10 in San Francisco, Justice Dept. attorneys have filed a notice of appeal in that case.

Gordon Hirabayashi, the third man who defied the military's curfew and exclusion orders in 1942, presents his petition before Judge Donald Voorhees on May 4 in the U.S. District Court in Seattle.

It seems likely that, regardless of Voorhees' decision, the Hirabayashi case will be appealed by one party or the other. Thus, all three of the WW2 test cases may eventually be heard before the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco at some time in the future.

Attorneys of record representing Minoru Yasui in his appeal are Peggy Nagae of Eugene, Oregon; Don Willner of Portland; and Frank Chuman of Los Angeles. Amicus curiae briefs were filed by the ACLU Foundation of Oregon, the Constitutional Law Clinic of Rutgers Law School, David Kairys for the American Friends Service Committee, and Henry Kane of Beaverton, Oregon.

cerned that the series could adversely affect how Japanese Americans are perceived. More specifically, Wakabayashi said that, if the series followed the novel, it could foster a misconception that the internment was militarily justified. Yet, he stated, "JACL cannot say the program shouldn't be shown."

"Sanga Moyu" was to have aired with English subtitles in Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York and Honolulu. "Meiji no Gunzo" and "Miyamoto Musashi," two historical dramas, will be substituted.

1000 Clubbers to tour Japan after national convention in Honolulu

MOSES LAKE, Wa.—A 1000 Club (Sennin-kai) tour/whing ding in Japan after the JAACL convention in Hawaii this summer is being planned, according to Columbia Basin JAACL president Ed Yamamoto, who is completing the arrangements through Pacifico Creative Services, Inc.

Being encouraged as a way of stretching the convention travel dollars for 1000 Clubbers with a 10-day Japan tour and a whing ding, either in Tokyo or Osaka to meet with the founders and members of the Japan JAACL, the tour departs from Honolulu for Tokyo via Japan Air Lines.

The tour, under sponsorship of the JAACL 1000 Club, includes nine restful stops in Western-style, air-conditioned comfort. All tour members must be in JAACL, it was added. Non-members can join the Columbia Basin JAACL at $35 single, $65 family/couple.

The Japan tour package, including round-trip air from Hawaii, costs $730. Reservations may be made through Yamamoto, 1000 Club vice-chair, 4502 Fairchild Loop, Moses Lake, WA 98837. (Details are to appear in a PC ad shortly.)

Those 1000ers who do have time to participate at the convention may complete travel arrangements through PCS with stay in Honolulu at a first-class hotel within walking distance to the convention site.

Aging can mean better health for Nisei

By GEORGE YOSHIDA
BERKELEY, Ca.—A great majority of Nisei are at a significant point of transition in life: they are in the "youth of old age." Aging becomes increasingly a matter of serious concern as retirement issues persist and chronic pains relentlessly remind one that "things ain't what they used to be." So, what can be done?

For many the answer lies in preventive, holistic health practices.

"New Horizons" is in part an approach to the above. It consists of tai chi chih, a modification of tai chi chuan; yoga; relaxation exercises; and hansha shiatsu, finger-pressure massage.

Section I meets on Monday evening, 7:30-9:30 p.m. beginning April 2. Section II meets on Thursdays, 10:00 a.m.-2:30 p.m. beginning April 5. All classes meet in the Jefferson School auditorium, Sacramento and Rose St., Berkeley. There is a $5 registration fee for the 10-week session. Non-Berkeley residents are welcome. Wear loose clothing and bring a mat for floor exercises; bring a bag lunch for Section II. For further information call 644-6130.

disaster. The one who really could have done something but didn't was Roosevelt, he asserted.

B'nai B'rith's associate national director Abraham Foxman feels the report lacks a historical perspective because the role of the Allied governments is not fully examined. "To make a judgment of what the Jews did or did not do is a little masochistic at this point," Foxman said. "Nobody needs a commission to know not enough was done. The fact that 6 million died means not enough was done."

And Rabbi Marc Tannenbaum, commission member and director of international relations at the American Jewish Committee, said the report tried to "create revisionist history" by ignoring America's own anti-Semitism.

Controversy has attended the commission since its beginning. New York Times has reported that in January 1983, its main financial backer, Jack Eisner, who had survived a death camp, withdrew his support, charging that "the vestiges of the old establishment were fighting to protect its name."

Goldberg found it ridiculous to hear that "on the one hand we're indicting American Jewry and, on the other, we're covering up. I think it's important the truth be stated. It's important that it shouldn't happen again."

Benefit to raise funds for NCCR

SAN FRANCISCO—Japanese Community Progressive Alliance (JCPA) celebrates its 11th anniversary with a dinner and program on Sunday, April 15. Dinner begins at 5:30 p.m. and the program at 7:00 p.m. The event takes place at the Christ United Presbyterian Church, 1700 Sutter St. Cost is $5.00 per person.

The dinner and program are a benefit to raise funds to send a delegation from the National Coalition for Redress and Reparations (NCCR) to Washington, D.C. This delegation will testify before congressional committees on the redress bills currently in Congress. Hearings are scheduled for sometime this spring.

Americans want to name McKinley valley for Uemura

TALKEETNA, Alaska—Jim Wickwire, Thomas Lowell and other American mountaineers have started a campaign to name one of the valleys of Mt. McKinley after Naomi Uemura, the Japanese climber who is presumed to have fallen to his death after conquering the meters long and 1 kilometer wide below the mountain's west face.

Lowell, former lieutenant governor of Alaska, said he wrote Vice President George Bush for federal cooperation.

Search Abandoned

On Feb. 12, his 43rd birthday, Uemura radioed that he had reached the 20,320-foot summit of Mt. McKinley. He was last observed four days later from a plane at about 16,000 feet. Winds since then were recorded at more than 60 miles an hour in temperatures of 14 degrees below zero. Search crews gave up on Mar. 8 after finding Uemura's snowshoes, diary, sleeping bag, fuel, jacket and shovel.

Uemura was an unusual Japanese in preferring solo treks to group travel. In the mid-sixties he worked as a roomboy at a Los Angeles motel for a month and spent another three months picking grapes on a farm to earn enough money to take him to Europe. Since then he became famous as a world explorer.

In 1978 he made a then-unprecedented solo journey by dogsled to the North Pole. He rafted alone along 4,000 miles of the Amazon, and tackled the summits of the highest mountains on four continents: Mont Blanc in Western Europe, Aconcagua in South America, Kilimanjaro in Africa, and Mt. McKinley. He also was in the first Japanese expedition to reach the top of Mt. Everest.

National Geographic peak in mid-February, reported Asahi News Service.

Uemura was the first person to make a solo ascent of North America's highest peak in midwinter.

The American alpinists said they hoped to name "the 4,200-meter valley," as it is now known, "in memory of the great Japanese climber and for friendship between the United States and Japan."

Almost all of the 500 climbers who come each year to Mt. McKinley bivouac in the valley, which stretches 2 kilo-

Mental hospitals may be giving Asians overdoses of drugs

TORRANCE, Ca.—A Harbor-UCLA psychiatrist is attempting to find out whether Asians require smaller doses of drugs to treat their psychiatric problems, compared to whites.

Keh-Ming Lin, MD., assistant professor of psychiatry with UCLA School of Medicine, is also coordinator of Mental Health Services for Minority Patients in the coastal region, which runs from Malibu to Long Beach and takes in some two million people.

Lin notes that psychiatrists and other clinicians have observed that Asians may be "overtreated" by psychiatric drugs in mental health clinics and hospitals. The same doses of common drugs like Haldol, Librium and Thorazine produce more serious effects and more complaints of side effects in Asian patients, even when the differences in body weights between Asians and whites are considered.

Diet and Physiology Studied

Some of the variables being studied in Lin's research include not only the weight differences between the races, but also different nutritional patterns and histories. Since U.S.-born persons of all races but especially whites eat more red meat, it may be that common psychiatric drugs are influenced in their effects by a high-protein diet.

"High levels of protein in the diet may mean that more protein-bonding of drugs occurs in the blood stream, which means that less of the drug is available to reach the brain," Lin suggests.

"Or, it may be that the differences occur in the brain receptors of Asians and Caucasians, which would probably mean that all psychiatric drugs would affect Asians and Caucasians differently. It may mean that the enzyme systems differ between races, causing differing effects from the same dosage of a drug."

Since most Asians are cautious of U.S. psychiatric drugs and probably have been exposed to less caffeine, alcohol and industry toxins than whites, all of these factors may be at work, Lin says. Or, "If none of these factors prove to be responsible for the differences in the way psychiatric drugs affect Asians and Caucasians, it may mean that the effects are based more on the ways Asians view drugs and how sensitive they are to the effects of drugs on their bodies." #
