'Little Girl in Picture' Nets House Co-sponsor

WASHINGTON—Rep. Terry Bruce (D-Ill.), who announced his intention to co-sponsor redress bill H.R. 442 on Aug. 25, was lobbied by a constituent who, in a 1942 photograph, came to symbolize the plight of Japanese Americans interned during WW2.

According to Chicago JACL redress chair Chiye Tomihiro, Bruce was persuaded to support the bill by Yukiko Okinaga Llewellyn of Champaign, Ill., who wrote to the congressman and talked with his staff. As a three-year-old girl, Llewellyn appeared in a War Relocation Authority photo taken when she and her family were about to depart from Los Angeles to Manzanar.

Three-year-old Yukiko Okinaga about to be sent to Manzanar in April 1942.

Image of Internment

In the photo, she is holding an apple and sitting on a leather suitcase, surrounded by duffel bags. The photo has been used often by proponents of redress to show that the internment affected all West Coast Japanese Americans, regardless of age.

"Mrs. Llewellyn has not forgotten that she and her family were deprived of their constitutional rights," said LEC executive director Grayce Uyehara. "She translated her remembrance of the inequity to act as a responsible American."

"We need more Americans to emulate Mrs. Llewellyn and others like her who decided to act personally to ring a clarion call for the U.S. Constitution. Sometimes, it takes only one person in a community to get the needed support for passage of the redress legislation."

Working at University

Today, after having relocated with her family to Cleveland, Llewellyn is an assistant dean at University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, which is in Bruce's 19th District.

Bruce, who represents the southeastern portion of the state, is serving his first term in the House. He is on the Agriculture Committee and its subcommittee on Wheat, Soybeans & Feed Grains; the Education & Labor Committee and its subcommittees on Human Resources and Postsecondary Education; and the Science & Technology Committee and its subcommittees on Energy Development & Applications and Science, Research & Technology.

He is the 141st co-sponsor of the redress bill.

NCJAR Asks Supreme Court to Review Suit

WASHINGTON — A petition calling for review of a class action lawsuit that seeks damages on behalf of 125,000 Japanese Americans interned during WW2 was filed Aug. 26 in the U.S. Supreme Court by the Chicago-based National Council for Japanese American Redress.

If successful, the petition will reinstate claims against the government that were dismissed after the lawsuit was filed in March 1983.

Claims Dismissed

The lawsuit, with 22 claims, sought more than $24 billion in damages. It was dismissed in May 1984 by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. The dismissal was then appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals, where it was partially reversed and remanded to trial in January 1986—but with only a single claim intact.

"The dismissed claims include the deprivation of constitutional guarantees such as habeas corpus, equal protection and due process," said William Hohri, NCJAR chair. "What's the point of having these constitutional rights if the government can violate them and then hide behind a legalism...and escape accountability?"

'Fraud and Concealment'

Although the odds for success in gaining access to the Supreme Court are about 1 in 20, Hohri said he is optimistic about NCJAR's chances.

"One of our main arguments," he said, "is that the wartime decisions of the Court were subverted by the government's fraud and concealment of evidence. This thesis has already been successfully tested in federal courts on the West Coast.

"It's a serious challenge to the Court's landmark Korematsu decision [of 1944]. Up until now, the legal system has lacked a proper vehicle for reconsidering Korematsu. Now they have it in this appeal."

The lawsuit has already overcome two procedural barriers.

INS Frees Japanese Scholar; Questions Raised About Laws

NEW YORK—Scholar Choichiro Yatani won his fight to stay in the U.S. Aug. 20 when federal officials waived the usual visa requirements and released him from detention.

After being imprisoned for six weeks in the Immigration & Naturalization Service Center, Yatani was released just hours after his lawyers sued the government for illegally holding him.

Visa Revoked

Yatani, a 40-year-old doctoral student at State University of New York at Stony Brook, has lived in the U.S. since 1977. He and his wife Nanako have two American-born sons.

When Yatani arrived at Kennedy International Airport on July 7 after attending a conference in the Netherlands, the State Dept. revoked his visa, ruling that he had concealed his membership in a communist organization. The department has refused to say how it got information linking Yatani to communist activity.

'Not a Communist'

In his lawsuit, Yatani stated that he "was never a member of, or associated with, the Communist Party, The Red Army, or any subversive, anarchist, totalitarian or terrorist organization."

The only reason that Yatani could think of for his detention was his arrest in Tokyo 18 years ago while taking part in an anti-Vietnam War demonstration.

The State Dept. waived its objections Aug. 20 and authorized the INS to release Yatani. In return, Yatani agreed to drop his lawsuit, although he added, "I want to know what is in that State Department file."

"It was a nightmare, just a nightmare," Yatani said as he left the detention center. "Some people in the U.S. government believe I am a communist or a terrible person, but I am not."

Public Support

The case produced an outpouring of public support for Yatani, who originally faced an Aug. 22 deadline to leave the country.

But while Yatani's ordeal is over, some experts have said that the case points out the need for reform of laws and procedures that determine who is barred from entering the country.

Arthur Helton, director of the Lawyer's Committee for Human Rights, said that the Yatani case demonstrates how a family man can be victimized by the laws as they now stand. "This sort of thing may be happening to a lot of people without the public ever being aware of it."

However, INS official Scott

SAN FRANCISCO — A debate and forum on the controversial Proposition 63, with Stanley Diamond, author of the "English Only" initiative, and Wilma Chan, vice president of Chinese Progressive Assn., will be one of the highlights of the third biennial Asian Pacific Democratic Leadership Conference, to be held Sept. 13-14 at Miyako Hotel, 1625 Post St.

Politicos to Speak

Entitled "Empowerment of Asian Pacific Americans Through the Electoral Process," the conference is sponsored by the Asian Pacific Caucus of the California Democratic Party. Honorary co-chairs are Reps. Robert Matsui and Norman Mineta and Secretary of State March Fong Eu.

Registration begins Sept. 13 at 9 a.m. and will be followed by a 10 a.m. plenary session featuring keynote speakers Mineta and Los Angeles City Councilman Mike Woo.

Workshop Topics

The Proposition 63 forum and workshops on such topics as "Our Role in the Democratic Party: State and National," "Our Goals for the 1990s: Electing Asian Pacific Democrats," and "Violence Against Asian Americans" will take place after the plenary session. Workshops will

Noted Activists to Address Conferees

by Mei Nakano

OAKLAND — Two prominent women activists will appear at "Japanese American Women in Transition—'86," to be held by the No. Calif.-W. Nev.-Pacific District JACL Women's Concerns Committee on Sept. 13, 8:30 a.m.-4 p.m., at Laney College.

•Noriko Nikki Sawada Bridges, who is to be honored with the Humanitarian Award at the conference, is perhaps the quintessential model for the Nisei woman. Born to immigrant farmers, hers is a story of progress from a sense of fecklessness and invisibility to an indisputable affirmation of her personhood.

Now in her sixties, she will be cited by the Women's Concerns Committee "for having made a positive impact on the life and culture of her community, for being a role model for strength and survival, and for serving as an agent of social change, one who challenges the barriers that impede progress for Asian American women."

After her incarceration in Poston during WW2, Bridges worked in San Francisco as a legal secretary and office manager for attorneys involved with unions and civil liberties cases. During this period, she became shop steward and delegate to state conventions for the Office Workers' Union.

The camp experience gave impetus to her commitment to work against war. In 1948, she campaigned for presidential candidate Henry Wallace of the newly-formed Progressive Party, a strong advocate for peace and detente. Among other anti-war activities, she became the first Bay Area chairperson of the Jeannette Rankin Brigade, the first national women's organization to oppose the Vietnam War.

Of her marriage to internationally known labor leader Harry Bridges, she remarks with characteristic candor that "Asian women who marry Caucasian bigshots [are thought to] have no identity of their own, that having bagged an important man, they have reached the top." To survive, she says, the woman must educate herself, her spouse, and society to the contrary—an ongoing struggle.

•Peggy Saika, executive director of Asian Law Caucus, will be the luncheon speaker at the conference.

In her capacity as director, Saika helps make decisions about which cases are selected, coordinates and organizes the workload, and plunges into the myriad outside activities that come with the position.

Hsieh Named to S.F. Board of Supervisors

SAN FRANCISCO—The appointment of Thomas Hsieh to the Board of Supervisors was announced Aug. 27 by Mayor Dianne Feinstein.

Hsieh, an architect who announced his intention to run for supervisor in February, is filling the vacancy left by Supervisor Louise Renne, who has been appointed city attorney.

Feinstein cited three major factors in her decision to appoint Hsieh:

"First, the appointment enables me to carry out my commitment to appoint an Asian to the board if a vacancy occurred. With almost a quarter of San Francisco of Asian ancestry, it is important that there be an Asian representative on the Board of Supervisors.

"Second, Tom Hsieh has demonstrated his interest in becoming a supervisor by actually taking the plunge and becoming a candidate for the office. In fact, he has run a strong campaign and is clearly a contender, which makes his appointment very logical.

"Thirdly, Tom has served this administration on two tough commissions [Public Utilities and Police], fully demonstrating his dedication to public office. I am convinced he will represent the interests of the entire city intelligently and effectively."

Born in Beijing, Hsieh has lived in San Francisco for more than 30 years. He received his undergraduate and graduate degrees at UC Berkeley.

He established his own firm in 1962, specializing in design of low-rent and senior housing. His projects include Western Park Apartments at Ellis and Laguna streets, El Bethel Arms apartments in the Western Addition, and the San Francisco Senior Center on O'Farrell and Jones streets.

Hsieh is board chair of Chinatown Neighborhood Center, Chinatown Improvement Assn. and Marshall Hale Memorial Hospital. He has received awards from Chinatown Youth Center, Self Help for the Elderly and other Chinatown organizations.

He has been a member of the Democratic National Committee since 1980 and chaired the DNC's Asian Pacific Caucus until its dissolution last year.

Museum, Book to Pay Tribute to Astronaut

KONA, Hawaii—The future site of the Lt. Col. Ellison S. Onizuka Pavilion and Museum at Keahole Airport was blessed Aug. 28 in a private ceremony for family, friends, and special guests.

The publication of a biography of the late astronaut, underwritten by United Airlines and scheduled for release in October, was also announced at the ceremony. Proceeds from book sales will go to the Onizuka Memorial Committee to fund the pavilion.

Dick Post, United's vice president for Hawaii, said the airline has granted $20,000 in cash and an additional $20,000 in promotional services for the writing, production and sales of the book.

"Ellison proved that anything can be achieved through hard work and dedication," said Post. "He was an inspiration to us all that dreams can be fulfilled."

The pavilion, to be located in the center of the airport, will cost an estimated $500,000 to build and will house photo displays, memorabilia and other educational materials on Onizuka and the space program, he said.

The book is co-authored by University of Hawaii American studies professor Dennis Ogawa, who wrote Kodomo No Tame Ni and Jan Ken Po, both of which deal with Hawaii's Japanese Americans, and by Kapiolani Community College program specialist Glen Grant, who wrote To a Land Called Tengoku, a book which marks the 100th anniversary of Japanese immigration to Hawaii.

The book will be available from all Liberty House stores in Hawaii, the Honolulu Advertiser, the Hawaii Tribune Herald (Hilo), West Hawaii Today (Kona), and the Onizuka Memorial Committee.

Marutani to be Recognized for Rights Record

PHILADELPHIA—William Marutani, former judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia County, will be the 1987 recipient of the Pennsylvania American Civil Liberties Union's Civil Liberties Award.

The award will be presented at the ACLU's fifth annual dinner, details of which have yet to be announced.

Marutani is being honored for his civil rights achievements, including:

- Participation as an attorney working with the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund;
- Service on the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians;
- Various judicial decisions, including a ruling which permitted women students to enter an all-boys' school.

Marutani has been active in JACL for most of his adult life. He served as national legal counsel for eight years and, more recently, was elected national vice president for planning and development at the JACL convention in Chicago. His column, "East Wind," appears regularly in the Pacific Citizen.

This prize-winning sand sculpture depicting a "Chinese who digs himself through to 'Wrong Beach'" first appeared on the front page of the Press-Telegram Aug. 19, 1985. It resurfaced in a Press-Telegram supplement this year.

Asian Caricature Reappears in Newspaper - 1 Year Later

LONG BEACH, Calif.—A photo that was branded as "racist" by some Asian Americans last year when it appeared in the Press-Telegram recently reappeared in an advertising supplement put out by the same newspaper.

The photo, from a sand sculpture contest co-sponsored by the Press-Telegram, was of a winning entry entitled "Wrong Beach," which depicted an Asian, with slanted slits for eyes and huge buck teeth, climbing out of the sand (see Sept. 20, 1985 PC). The figure was described in the article as a "Chinaman."

After receiving letters of protest, one of them from Los Angeles Councilman Mike Woo, the editors printed an apology.

The photo, minus the racial slur, was used in Press-Telegram People Plus (July 30-Aug. 5) to promote this year's sand sculpture contest.

In a letter to the Press-Telegram dated July 31, Ron Iseri, owner of Lianne's Hallmark in Long Beach, wrote, "Unbelievable!... You put the same racist picture of a sand sculpture that you had put in your newspaper about one year ago. Didn't you get enough complaints the first time?"

Iseri asked that his ad be withdrawn from the weekly supplement. "Maybe money or lack of it will get someone to wake up in your paper," he wrote.

Meanwhile, Up in Canada

OUR NIKKEI BRETHREN in Canada are very much engaged in their redress effort to get their government to acknowledge the grievous injustices inflicted upon them and their parents in 1942. In previous columns, we've had occasion to describe some of the inhuman acts perpetrated against Japanese Canadians under the War Measures Act, the Canadian version of Executive Order 9066. In many respects, Japanese Canadians were subjected to even worse treatment than that inflicted upon Japanese Americans. Among other things, in Canada at the time there was no Constitution to impede the government there. (Although in the United States, the existence of the Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the Amendments, to safeguard the rights and dignity of its citizenry, ended up being just a piece of paper.)

IN CANADA TODAY, there are reportedly some 45,000 Japanese Canadians. In 1942, there were some 22,000 whose property was seized and liquidated and who were banished from their homes in British Columbia. It was not until April of 1949 that the ban was finally lifted. In an effort to attain some semblance of token restitution and restoration of their dignity, at one point an understanding was reached whereby some $6 million was to be paid, plus a formal apology. The government officials reneged on their agreement.

Which should be a lesson to those south of the Canadian border who entertain thoughts of being able to "work things out" with the government.

IN MAY OF this year, a Price Waterhouse financial study commissioned by the Japanese Canadian group was completed, certifying the estimate of losses suffered by the Nikkei Canadians. The report provided some interesting and encouraging information: some 95% support the redress effort, and 71% favor individual compensation. And, yes, in Canada too there are those who do not support the redress effort of their Nikkei brethren. But no group in our society is called upon to function on 100 percent unanimity. And when it comes to minorities within a society, neither should such minorities be called upon to present a unanimous front.

EAST WIND

Only in a completely totalitarian state is such a condition imposed, and even there they are not successful in attaining such an impossible state.

THE NIKKEI CANADIAN redress proposal calls for several remedial acts by their government: acknowledgement of the wrong; restoration of citizenship rights to those expatriated to Japan; clear the records of those convicted for refusal to observe banishment from their homes in British Columbia; $25,000 individual compensation; $50 million to a community fund; establishment of a Human Rights Foundation; and repeal or neutralizing of the War Measures Act so that it cannot be used again to inflict injustices on others in Canada.

It will undoubtedly be a prolonged effort calling for fortitude and perseverance. As the Issei used to say, "Gambare."

ONE MAJOR OBSTACLE to the Canadian effort appears to have been a cabinet minister who was unsympathetic, if not antagonistic, to the Nikkei Canadians' quest for accounting and justice. But in a recent political upheaval, that particular minister was replaced. Presumably, the political shuffle will have improved the prospects for realization of the Nikkei's efforts up there.

But as the Issei also used to say, "Yudan sube karazu."

WE WISH OUR brethren north of the border our very best in their continuing quest. Among other things, I somehow have the feeling that our two fates are, and will be, related.

A Double Standard?

BY THE BOARD

by Yosh Nakashima

I'm putting on my hard hat and flak jacket after this article gets printed.

At the Chicago convention during the Women's Caucus luncheon, all the candidates were asked the same question, whether male or female. That may have been thought of as equal, but the question gave an edge to the women candidates. Equal opportunity and equal access for the women of JACL is important, but they must then be equally sensitive to everyone in reverse. Doesn't equal mean equal?

It is our assessment that an interesting observation about the Chicago meeting is that it was the women voters who supposedly gave the victory to the new national president. I don't have actual facts, but in discussions with a number of people who happened to be women, and who were perceived to have key votes, it was clear that they voted for the male candidate.

One could say that it was the qualifications and the candidate's point of view that received the vote, but many of the women who have stated clearly and categorically that it was time for women within JACL to be given an opportunity to lead and be considered for higher office chose to vote otherwise. I think there is a double standard, and the saying "Do as I say, not as I do" seems to be in force to some degree.

You all had an excellent opportunity with a well qualified candidate, and in my mind you all didn't come through. The message I read is that men must be open and aggressively promote the cause for women, but women can be discriminating and choose otherwise. Somehow a double standard seems to apply, and I need to be convinced that there is a real feel for equality by many of the women within JACL.

As we have stated before, the women of JACL who are achievers and have a strong sense about themselves do not need the men to facilitate the process. They are fully capable of opening their own opportunities and have and will continue to lead and to assume positions of leadership without any special effort by the men. Those that have a true sense of self-confidence have few obstacles to advance themselves.

I urge a serious consideration of an effort to bring the women up to a level of sensitivity and awareness to advance the cause of women within JACL. We welcome your comments about your perception about what happened in Chicago. Can there be a generational gap?

Breaking Taboos Is Hard to Do

by Edna Ikeda

At eight o'clock in the morning, I waited outside the auditorium with two hundred other people for the apprentice civil service exam. As I looked around the parking lot at the groups of tough-looking field workers, I wondered what I was doing here.

The apprentice positions offered people a chance for training in the areas of skilled trades: carpentry, plumbing, electrical, painting, etc. It offered paid schooling and a chance to become a journeyman in a chosen trade.

As my paranoia began to wear off, I noticed that there were also female office workers in line. It made me feel better that everyone wasn't a macho muscle man, and that quite a few women had applied. Nevertheless, I timidly stood in line and wondered how I would do in a trade.

When I was in high school (way in the dark ages), women rarely signed up for shop or men for home economics. I remember being in junior high and hearing the horrified reaction of my peers when a certain girl signed up for shop. For some reason, there was a terrible taboo about doing that.

As a result, I never learned basic carpentry, plumbing, or welding. However, I can fix simple things using common sense and do a mean tape job on broken items. I can make a twenty-seven piece blazer, plaster holes in walls, and put shelving together by following directions.

Unfortunately, most maintenance people would scoff at these skills. I recently went to an interview for a position called equipment technician trainee. When they asked me about my ability to put things together, I told them about my twenty-seven piece blazer. When they asked me

Wyoming Remembers

FROM THE FRYING PAN

Bill Hosokawa

Somewhat more than a year ago Bob Nellis of KTWQ Television in Casper, Wyo., called to ask for help on a documentary he was planning on the Heart Mountain wartime relocation camp. Several weeks later he showed up in Denver with a cameraman. From the beginning it was obvious Nellis had done his homework. He knew the right questions to ask.

Nellis' quest for information took him to many parts of Wyoming, to the Los Angeles area, where numbers of former Heart Mountain internees now live, and to San Jose, where former Heart Mountaineers held a reunion last summer. To say the least, this kind of commitment by a small television station in a sparsely populated state was remarkable.

So was the film that Nellis produced. It was first aired late last spring and received much critical acclaim. I saw it in Cody last June when Chester Blackburn, who had a video cassette copy, showed it for the benefit of the group that assembled for the dedication of the Heart Mountain war memorial. The other day KTWQ, called K2 in Wyoming, sent me a copy and I saw the film again.

Derived from Poem

Titled "Winter in My Soul," the documentary was produced sensitively and sympathetically. It demonstrates once again the power of television which brings people who talk and pictures that move into the living room.

The title comes from a poem by a young evacuee, Miyuki Aoyama, first published in the Heart Mountain Sentinel: Snow upon the rooftop/Snow upon the coal; Winter in Wyoming—/Winter in my soul. It is an apt title, reflecting the physical and spiritual bleakness of the Heart Mountain experience. Ironically, the reading of those four lines in a somewhat accented voice results in one of the documentary's few false notes.

The documentary is directed primarily to a Wyoming audience—to let residents of the state know what happened there 40-odd years ago and more important, why. It also is of much wider interest. For those who went through the Evacuation, it covers familiar ground. But it is instructive to go over it again, and to hear the personal stories of individuals who were forced to leave their homes and found themselves confined behind barbed wire on the desolate benchlands, confused and angry but willing to make the best of a deplorable and unfair situation.

Balanced View

The documentary pulls no punches, recalling the failure of Wyoming's political leaders to cope with the problem. But it balances that by recognizing the selfless efforts of homesteaders like Chester and Mary Blackburn, who settled near the campsite, to memorialize the sacrifices of the evacuees.

Nearly a half century after the shame of the Evacuation, the subject is still very much alive. It is being kept alive by efforts such as those of K2 and other documentarians, by newspaper feature writers and Sansei playwrights, by authors and museum curators, and that is as it should be.

K2 is rightly proud of Bob Nellis's work and is making it available to schools and civic organizations. It deserves even wider viewing. Perhaps Bacon Sakatani, the moving force behind erection of the memorial honoring Heart Mountain's war dead, will want to get copies for circulation in Southern California.

An Active Second Year

by Harry Kajihara
LEC Fund Drive Chair

The second year of LEC's three-year fund drive was launched with a tremendously successful Americans for Fairness dinner. The event was chaired by Cressey Nakagawa, president of San Francisco Chapter; co-chairs were Frank Damrell, Pamela Duffy, Patricia DiGiorgio, and Jerome Falk. The dinner added $50,000 to the fund drive coffers, according to an article in the July 18 PC.

Meanwhile, the individual and chapter donations two months into the second year of the LEC Fund Drive total $26,212.60. Prime solicitor Cherry Kinoshita of Seattle raised $7,050 in those two months, bringing her total to nearly $12,000. She leads all prime solicitors in amounts raised. A full listing of donors appears on this page.

Sacramento Event

Eight Northern Calif.-Western Nev.-Pacific District chapters—Florin, French Camp, Lodi, Marysville, Placer, Reno, Sacramento and Stockton—are planning to sponsor an LEC Fund Drive event on Nov. 29 in Sacramento. This event is being chaired by past National JACL President Jerry Enomoto and vice-chaired by Mary Tsukamoto, just named as JACLER of the Biennium.

Words of Appreciation

The LEC Board approved a project to express appreciation to the 1,500-plus donors who contributed to the LEC Fund Drive during the first year. LEC/JACL redress lapel pins were sent to each. Ventura County Chapter undertook the packaging and mailing work. Thank you, Ann Asaoka, Michi Hirai, Janet Kajihara, Dorothy Russ, Mary Sakazaki, and Dorene Tsukida.

The pin is shaped like the scroll on which the original U.S. Constitution was written. The tie-in is that redress is a constitutional issue. "Redress" runs diagonally across the face of the pin, and "LEC" and "JACL" are embossed to identify the organization.

A terrific use for this pin is to wear it at social gatherings, conferences, meetings, etc. When a person asks you about the pin, it presents a perfect opportunity to tell him/her about redress, the camp experience, fund-raising, etc. Mollie Fujioka, NCWNP governor, received a donation right on the spot from a supervisor. Others have told me of similar experiences.

First-Year Report

A 33-page LEC Annual Report covering the first year of LEC operation was distributed to the delegates at the National Convention in Chicago. This report covers the progress made in advancing redress, legislative strategy, goals met and not met (and reasons why), funds raised, funds spent, and the total activities of LEC. Those who submitted reports include LEC chair Min Yasui, executive director Grayce Uyehara, legislative strategist Grant Ujifusa, treasurer Shig Wakamatsu and myself.

All chapter presidents, please feel it is your duty and responsibility to ask your delegate(s) to the convention to bring this report to your next board meeting and have all board members review, glance at, or—at minimum—fan through the 33 pages. Thank you.

The Darling of the Mets

Bob Shimabukuro

After writing the column about the Asian groom catalog, and wondering about the status of Asian males, I was informed by my brother that Ron Darling was on the cover of the latest Gentleman's Quarterly, the magazine for men's fashions. Could that really be? An Asian male on the cover of a fashion magazine? Are times really changing?

For the uninitiated, Darling is a member of the New York Mets first-class pitching staff who happens to be of Chinese-Hawaiian-French-English ancestry, a Yale graduate in Asian Studies, and makes in the neighborhood of $400,000 a year.

Until his marriage in January, he was considered one of the most eligible men in the country. And, at the beginning of the season, he was considered the Mets' No. 2 pitcher, behind Dwight Gooden.

I was going to do a piece earlier this year after the arbitration hearings on players' salaries during which Darling was short-changed by his arbitrator's decision. Jerry Lynch, another Mets pitcher, received a little more than Darling, and his record wasn't even close to Darling's. Aha! I thought to myself at the time. Discrimination!

But what can you say about discrimination when the guy's making over $400,000? And getting modeling jobs to boot.

And after Lynch was traded to earn his $550,000 in Wrigley Field with the Cubs, what more was there to say? After all, the Mets are on track to be World Champs, while the Cubs are on track to be, well...the Cubs. (And now I'll probably hear from all the people in Chicago.)

But the assumption that Darling is happy with the Mets may be misleading. The sportswriters love to play up his Yale background, emphasizing that he is having problems with Mets manager Davey Johnson because he is smarter than his manager. Johnson reportedly does not like anybody on the team to be smarter than him. That's one version.

Another version is offered by Darling himself, who feels that Johnson treats him like a No. 2 son, behind No. 1 son Gooden. Johnson apparently is never satisfied with what Darling does, saying that he can do much better. Quick to criticize, slow to praise. Johnson must have some Japanese blood in him.

Another report on the conflict says that Johnson thinks Darling thinks too much. Now that's a change. When I was playing baseball as a child and suffering from a chronic problem of always throwing to the wrong base, my coach used to yell at me all the time: "Think, Bob, for God's sake, think!" Are coaches different now? Maybe they are, at least in the big leagues. Maybe times have changed.

Small Price to Pay

Editor's note: The following letter was received in response to Bob Shimabukuro's Aug. 22 column, "Asian Groom Catalog."

Well, Bob, $350 is a small price to pay to really find the right man. The real problem is that these wonderful "raw diamonds" would never get themselves down to your Groom Headquarters to enroll in the program! The only way this would work is for you to be a roving Allen Funt (as in "Candid Camera").

It seems even our more gregarious brothers need to be hit over the head with a baseball bat or seduced when they're drunk, or both. But keep trying—if you get any takers, I get first dibs. There's a lot of us waiting to write out those $350 checks!

BREAKING TABOOS

about my mechanical abilities, I told them I could operate a sewing machine.

Then they asked me how I functioned at heights. I froze at this question. How could I tell them that my height limit was the top rung of a stepladder? I shivered as I tried to explain why I would feel semi-confident walking on a beam a hundred feet in the air with only a safety belt.

Phobias Galore

At least I was straightforward about confined spaces. How could I hide my aversion to them, when I get claustrophobia in small restrooms? Needless to say, I did not get the maintenance position. However, I decided to give the apprenticeship position a crack after attending an orientation program where I saw women who did carpentry, fixed radios, and welded.

It was especially inspiring to see other minority women in the trades, including those who had broken out of the office routine. Who knows—some years from now I too may be one of them!

In Chicago, a Common Past and Present

by Fae Minabe

"But hey, I know your cousin..." "Your mother and I went to grammar school together..." "I remember your dad from camp..." "It's been years, but do you know..."

This was my first National JACL Convention, and frankly, I was uncertain of what to expect. At first there was the tentativeness of others having to meet another "aggressive New Yorker." But once into the Nikkei "Do You Know" game, I found myself caught up in the warm comfort of a common ground and a shared past upon which new friendships could be built and old relationships made to flourish.

Wondering why I don't play the same game outside of the JA community, it occurred to me that this is not really a "game" but a means of belonging for a people once isolated emotionally and physically from the rest of the world. It's part of the historical glue that keeps JACL together, and part of what keeps people coming back to the convention year after year, often on their own time and expense. Having now seen and felt the emotional importance of JACL, it's clear to me that the organization does indeed have a future.

I can't remember when I've seen so many sets of bloodshot eyes. Candidates and campaign committees were surviving on two or three hours of sleep a night. The rest of us were just out late over a drink with old friends or partying with new ones. Nonetheless, the excitement of the convention kept everybody going, and by the last day the air was charged with campaign hopes and promises, or maybe just coffee jitters.

The politicizing was fast and furious, and in the end the more organized group secured positions for their candidates. Doing your homework really pays off. There were a few surprises, a few tears, but most heartening was a convention-wide commitment to working together in the next biennium. Redress is still our number-one priority, and the newly elected officers are committed to seeing it through, but they need your help. Your congressman needs to hear from you.

Convention dinners are generally pretty dull stuff. But when you're honoring Walt and Mildred Woodward (of Bainbridge Island), Ellison Onizuka (his wife Lorna accepting), and Congressman (and next Speaker of the House) Jim Wright of Texas, pride comes quickly and a jumble of emotions and tears soon follow.

To hear and meet each of the "honorary leaders" of JACL—and they are leaders, even if self-elected through their actions—was a gift that each of us was able to bring home.

Clearly, we have some very special friends.

Minabe is New York Chapter vice president and Eastern District Council vice governor.

Founded Scholarship Committee

Nakamura, Leader in JACL, Seabrook Communities, Dies

BRIDGETON, N.J. — Longtime JACL 1000 Club member and community leader Kiyomi Nakamura, 70, passed away July 30 following an extended illness.

He was an active member of Bridgeton Lion's Club, a past president of Seabrook JACL, and a founding member of the National JACL Thomas T. Hayashi Memorial Law Scholarship Committee, which he served on for over 10 years.

Nakamura also served on the original guideline committee for Bridgeton High School's ecumenical baccalaureate service and was instrumental in the formation of Seabrook Young Buddhist Assn.

He was born in Fowler, Calif., and graduated from Fowler High School in 1936. During WW2, Nakamura married Ellen Ayako Noguchi in Jerome, Ark., where both had been interned. In June 1944, the newlyweds became the first of many families to relocate to Seabrook Farms in New Jersey.

Studied by Night

Nakamura spent the initial years working as a cost accountant at Seabrook. During that time, he attended evening classes at Wharton School of Law & Finance, University of Pennsylvania for seven years.

In 1957, he joined William Thos. Athey & Co. CPA of Bridgeton and was employed by the firm as a senior staff accountant until his death.

The final rites held Aug. 4 at Seabrook Buddhist Temple were officiated by Rev. Kenryu Tsuji of Washington, D.C. and

Rev. Shingetsu Akahoshi from Osaka. Rev. Eijun Kujo of Tri-State Buddhist Temples in Denver spoke on behalf of the relatives and F. Alan Palmer of Deerfield, N.J., gave the eulogy.

Nakamura is survived by his wife Ellen, son Kennon, grandchildren Gregory and Maya Nakamura of Burke, Va., brother Tokio Tom of Fowler, sisters Fusaye Tanaka, Betty Kajioka and Natsuko Ishii, all of Sacramento, and several nieces and nephews.

Preventive Measures Urged to Curb Violence

NCJAR SUIT

First, the district court found the 1948 Evacuation Claims Act constitutionally deficient as the exclusive remedy, contrary to the government's contention that payments made under the act provided just compensation.

Second, the appeals court moved the commencement of the statute of limitations, which is normally six years, to July 1980, when the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians was formed. The government had maintained that former internees could have sued the government in the years immediately following WW2.

Final Hurdle

NCJAR seeks to have the Supreme Court removed the third and final hurdle: sovereign immunity, which requires that the government consent to be sued before it can be sued.

The Supreme Court's response to the petition is not expected for several months.

LOS ANGELES—Growing anti-Asian violence in America was the topic of an Aug. 25 seminar in which community leaders wrestled with the problem from different angles.

There seemed to be a consensus from all present that the problem is a serious one that needs to be addressed not only by the Asian community, but by mainstream America as well.

Stewart Kwoh, executive director of Asian Pacific American Legal Center, listed what he felt were factors contributing to growing anti-Asian sentiment across the country:

- America's economic uncertainty caused by a trade imbalance with Japan and other Asian countries;
- Hysteria against immigrants;
- Media stereotyping of Asians that perpetuates negative attitudes;
- Economic competition between different groups for scarce local resources;
- Myths that Asian immigrants receive special government benefits unavailable to non-Asians.

Using statistics gathered by the Los Angeles County Human Relations Commission, Kwoh noted that in 22 documented racially motivated incidents so far this year, 11 of the victims were Asians, making them "the most victimized ethnic group" in the county.

The mainstream media has provided "fairly balanced coverage" of the issue, but "do not cover the problem often enough" and tend to view it as a "local problem," said J.K. Yamamoto, assistant editor of Pacific Citizen.

Contrary to the mainstream media's practice, Asian community newspapers treat anti-Asian violence as "a national problem" and play "a monitoring role," he said.

"The way we treat anti-Asian violence in the Asian American newspapers is the way the mainstream media treat the Tylenol poisonings," Yamamoto elaborated. In both cases, he said, "every reader is concerned about it and every reader considers himself a potential victim."

John Saito, Pacific Southwest District JACL regional director, discussed the findings and recommendations of the state Attorney General's Commission on Racial, Ethnic, Religious and Minority Violence, of which he is a member.

Established in 1984, the commission held hearings throughout the state to obtain an accurate assessment of the problem. Among the recommendations the commission came up with:

- Training for police officers and district attorneys to teach them how to respond to racially motivated crime;
- Creation of a public awareness program;
- Establishing a comprehensive criminal justice policy for responding to and preventing hate crime, including penalties to deter it.

Officer Ben Lee of the Los Angeles Police Dept.'s Asian Task Force talked about some of the problems encountered by officers when they deal with Asian immigrants.

The Asian Task Force, currently made up of 12 officers, was formed in 1975, when the city began experiencing a growing population of Koreans, Chinese and Thais but did not have the resources to deal with them.

The biggest obstacle back then was getting victims to step forward and report crimes, he said, and even now the same problem still exists. To encourage Asian immigrants to report crimes, the LAPD set up two storefront police offices in Koreatown and Chinatown in 1982.

Dr. Lucie Cheng, director of UCLA's Asian American Studies Center, felt that education could play an important role in helping non-Asians better understand the Asian community.

Kwong reiterated one of the recommendations of Saito's commission as another solution. "If the law enforcement agencies are responsive in terms of monitoring, we will have the hard data to see where the problem really is," he said.

The seminar, held at the downtown Pacific Bell building, was sponsored by Asian American Journalists Assn. and Asian Pacific Women's Network.

Two Little Tokyo Churches Named as Monuments

LOS ANGELES — The Cultural Heritage Commission of the city's Cultural Affairs Dept. voted July 2 to declare the old Los Angeles Hompa Hongwanji Buddhist Temple and Japanese Union Church, both in Little Tokyo, as Historic-Cultural Monuments.

Hompa Hongwanji, also known as Nishi Hongwanji, is located at 355-369 E. 1st St. and 109-119 N. Central Ave. Created by architect Edgar Cline, it was declared a monument because of the importance of its exterior and sanctuary, which bring together design elements of Eastern and Western architecture.

Built in 1920s

The temple, which was dedicated in 1925, is also noted for its significance to the history of the Japanese American community in Los Angeles. In addition to being a religious and cultural institution, it also served as temporary shelter for Japanese Americans released from the wartime internment camps.

The building has been vacant since 1969, when the congregation moved to a new facility on 1st and Vignes streets. A 50-year lease on the temple is being negotiated between the Dept. of General Services (the owner of the property) and the Japanese American National Museum, which wants to use the building to house a permanent collection of historical documents and artifacts relating to the JA experience.

The Japanese Union Church, located at 120 N. San Pedro St., was declared a monument because it is a notable example of ecclesiastical neoclassical architecture in the Los Angeles area. It too was an important religious institution in the local JA community.

Designed by architect H.M. Patterson, the building was dedicated in 1923. During WW2, it was a religious and social center for Blacks from the South who had moved into buildings left vacant by the internment. After the war, the church became a housing resource for returning ex-internees. The congregation has since moved to a new building on 3rd and San Pedro streets.

East West Players, an Asian American theater company presently based in east Hollywood, has proposed to use the now-vacant building for performances.

The designation of the two structures requires City Council confirmation. The council's Recreation, Library & Cultural Affairs Committee will consider the matter in the near future.

The addition of the Little Tokyo buildings to the list of 308 Historic-Cultural Monuments is part of an ongoing effort by the Cultural Heritage Commission to preserve historically and architecturally significant creation in Los Angeles. Info: (213) 485-2433.

YATANI CASE: QUESTIONS RAISED

Blackman remarked that this case was "an isolated circumstance."

Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.), who is author of a bill aimed at changing current immigration law, pointed out that the law as it now stands is "clearly in violation of the Helsinki Accords on freedom of travel for those with different ideological beliefs. It makes America look bad."

John H. Marburger 3d, president of SUNY Stony Brook, suggested that the processes could be simplified. "A person from a friendly country should have access to information regarding the charges against him," he said.

"Universities often have problems with the State Department and the Immigration Services when they try to bring in scholars, scientists and artists," said Marburger. "I think if that process can be simplified as a result of this case, it would help us all."
