Sonoma chapter works to establish civil rights agency

Special to the Pacific Citizen

To combat the rising tide of race-motivated incidents and in anticipation of the 50th anniversary commemoration of Pearl Harbor, the Sonoma County Chapter, JACL, has been successful in the development of a human rights commission and an educational curriculum guide in the area.

Beginning late last year, the chapter mounted a series of activities in the county. These included a hate crimes workshop, spearheading a drive for a county human relations commission, and co-sponsoring and publishing a curriculum guide on Japanese Americans.

The chapter's community-wide anti-Asian hate crimes workshop, held last September, focused on preventive measures and solutions and identified a network of county resources. Representatives from several minority groups attended but several non-Asians also were present, as well as members of law enforcement agencies, the media, and Dennis Hayashi, the soon-to-be-appointed national director of JACL at the time.

Noting that a human relations commission had not been established in the county, supervisors attending the workshop said that such an agency might be valuable in dealing with human rights violations. They added, however, that budgetary constraints might prohibit the county from establishing one at that time.

Nonetheless, the chapter sponsored a drive for start-up funds to create an agency. Board member Mei Nakano, who presided over the workshop, mobilized a coalition representing diverse groups in the county: African Americans, Chinese Americans, Filipino Americans, Japanese Americans, Jewish Americans, Native Americans, Hispanic Americans, gay and lesbian groups, and other human rights activists. After months of meetings, the coalition emerged with strategies and a strong vision of how the commission should be defined.

In a public meeting last month, delegates from the coalition presented a mission statement before the County Board of Supervisors and argued for the establishment of a human rights commission. The board unanimously approved.

"We were surprised, but I guess we shouldn't have been," said Nakano. "We had done a lot of ground work, and the list of members of our coalition, representing all those groups, sent a strong message. Also, the presentation happened shortly after the Rodney King fiasco, which might have helped."

The formal launching of the commission will take place sometime this fall, after details concerning budgetary and structural matters have been worked out between coalition members and the Office of the County Administration.

"These were significant events for our JACL," said Carol

Yamaguchi, Moriguchi win JACL biennium awards

Olympic figure skating champion Kristi Yamaguchi, whose exploits on ice have thrilled audiences and made her an international celebrity, and Tomio Moriguchi, a distinguished and successful businessman who is equally known for his civic and community work in the Pacific Northwest, have been chosen to receive JACL's biennium award.

The award, to be presented at the biennial convention in Denver, Colo., recognizes and honors those Americans of Japanese ancestry whose outstanding achievements in different fields of endeavor have received regional, national or international recognition and whose contributions have added to the sum of human knowledge and/or enhanced the quality of life in our society.

"As in years past, we had a number of very distinguished nominees

JACL bulletin

The first issue of a monthly bulletin detailing current activities and projects of national JACL has been sent to all chapter presidents to facilitate information between headquarters and membership, according to Joy Morimoto, public information officer.

"Communication has been a long-standing problem within the organization. One means of trying to better keep our members informed is to have a monthly newsletter which explains some of the current legislation we are addressing, as well as issues of import to the organization," Morimoto said.

JACL Biennium Awards

Kristi Yamaguchi—everyone's All-American

She is a role model, an Olympic champion, a celebrity, and a heroine to many Americans, young and old. But perhaps the most fitting description of Kristi Yamaguchi is simply this: "all-American."

A Yonsei from Fremont, Calif., Yamaguchi began her illustrious skating career at the age of 7. Earlier this year in Albertville, France, she became the first American woman since Dorothy Hamill in 1976 to win the gold medal in women's figure skating. Following up her gold medal performance, Yamaguchi successfully defended her world title in March.

In recognition of her outstanding accomplishments and the impact she has had upon both the sports world and society in general, Yamaguchi is one of two recipients of this year's Japanese American of the Biennium award, the highest public award of the National JACL. Although she will be unable to attend the JACL National Convention next month in Denver, her family will be on hand to accept the award on her behalf.

Speaking on the impact of Yamaguchi's accomplishments, Frank Sato, chairman of the Japanese American of the Biennium Award Committee, said, "Kristi's perseverance and determination, coupled with the grace and dignity with which she competes and carries herself, has made her an important role model for American youth. She has brought a great sense of pride to this country and to the Japanese American community in particular."

The reason for Yamaguchi's absence from the convention is simple. She is one of four athletes who will attend the Summer Olympics in Barcelona as part of President Bush's official delegation. They are Arnold Schwarzenegger, Mary Lou Retton, and basketball player Greg Anthony.

In a recent interview at her Fremont home, Yamaguchi discussed the JACL award and the events of the past few months.

Yamaguchi said she was truly surprised at being named Japanese American of the Biennium, especially upon learning that she is the first athlete and youngest recipient of the award. "It is such a prestigious award... there are so many Japanese Americans doing great things... It is an honor. I have had so much support and encouragement from everyone in the Japanese American community and I want to thank them." She gives credit to the community for helping her get to where she is today.

Since the World Championships in March, Yamaguchi has taken a respite from training and has only recently resumed practice sessions. She has been busy on the road touring and performing in shows, and having fun in the process. She has also managed to squeeze in time for a much-needed vacation, the first one in years, she explained. In addition to visits to the White House, which included meeting Russian President Boris Yeltsin, Yamaguchi has appeared twice on the "Arsenio Hall Show," and most recently played a little basketball with Magic Johnson and Larry Bird.

"The Olympics has been the best part of my life so far, because it has always been my dream to just be there," said Yamaguchi, as she discussed the aftermath and implications of winning an Olympic gold medal. "It was beyond my dreams to do as well as I did and come home with the gold medal."

Noting that it was also important to simply enjoy the Olympic experience, Yamaguchi said, "I wanted to make my first experience at the Olympics an enjoyable one. I wanted to have fun and interact with some of the athletes, yet still know that when it came down to skating, that was the important thing, and to concentrate on that."

The publicity resulting from the Olympic games has touched other members of her family, she laughed. She related a humorous story of how her grandmother, who has appeared several times on TV, was recognized at a McDonald's restaurant. "Someone came up to her and said, 'Grandma!' and asked for her autograph. She was excited!"

From a close-knit family, Yamaguchi speaks fondly of her late grandfather. "He was probably one of my biggest fans," she said. "He was very supportive and went to a lot of my competitions," even accompanying her to Japan when she entered an NHK competition. During World War II, while Yamaguchi's grandmother lived in an internment camp, her grandfather served in the U.S. Army. "I looked up to him a lot because he loved America. It was his home." Whatever he might have felt about the war and wartime experience were things he never expressed to his grandchildren. "It just made us realize how lucky we are today and everything we have," said Yamaguchi.

Asked whether in her career she has ever been made to feel uncomfortable about being a Japanese American, Yamaguchi said for this award," said Frank Sato, chair of the awards committee.

Born and raised in the Puget Sound area of Washington, Moriguchi graduated from the University of Washington with a degree in mechanical engineering. He worked briefly for Boeing before entering his family's business. Today, he is president and CEO of Uwajimaya, Inc., which began as a mom-and-pop store to become a $30 million a year retail and wholesale enterprise.

Actively involved in the Japanese American and greater Seattle community, Moriguchi was instrumental in developing the Keiro Nursing Home project, a $7 million nursing home facility in Seattle. He is also credited with spearheading the revitalization of Seattle's International District, which in the 1960s encompassed a Chinatown, a Nihonmachi, and was home to many Filipinos. Moriguchi brought together diverse groups to form the International District Improvement Association, which in turn fostered creation of the International District Health Clinic, Asian Counseling and Referral Service, Chinese Information and Services Center, and the Denise Louie Child Care Center.

Active in JACL, Moriguchi served as president of the Seattle Chapter and was a member of the national JACL board, serving as national treasurer from 1974-1975.

Some of his current activities include serving as a member of the board of directors of Seafirst Corporation, Seattle First National Bank (the first Nikkei to serve), Washington Energy Company (parent company of Washington Natural Gas Co.), Seattle Foundation, Pacific Science Center, and the Seattle Chamber of Commerce. Moriguchi presently serves on the Washington State Advisory Council on International Trade and Development and the advisory board of the International Trade Institute of North Seattle Community College.

Treasured memories

The Western Treasure Valley Cultural Center will capture Japanese American life in eastern Oregon and southwestern Idaho.

By RANDY HARANO
IDC District Governor

The Western Treasure Valley lies in eastern Oregon and southwestern Idaho, in dry prairie country where cattle raising has been the dominant lifestyle for more than a century. With the arid climate, farming was a hit or miss proposition until the large water impoundment projects of the 1930s. Damming the precious water gave farmers foreknowledge of how much water would be available for their crops during the long, dry summer. Among the first farmers to utilize this resource were a handful of Issei immigrants. Their experience and expertise helped develop the row crop farms that have become the backbone of the region.

During World War II, as thousands of Japanese Americans on the West Coast were sent to internment camps, Western Treasure Valley geared up for war. The local agricultural industry responded with increased production for the war effort despite a shortage in the labor supply. The area in and around Ontario, Ore., was in the designated "free zone," where relocated Japanese Americans were allowed to live and work instead of going to an internment camp. On May 21, 1942, a group of 15 evacuees left the Portland Army Assembly Center for seasonal agricultural work in the Western Treasure Valley under civilian restriction order of the Western Defense Command. So well did this pilot program succeed that subsequently 10,000 evacuees would venture out from the barbed wire compounds to help produce the earth's bounty. In the Western Treasure Valley the number grew to more than 2,000 that came to work the fields.

Following the war, many of the former internees found it difficult to return to their former homes where feelings of hate and animosity prevailed. Some chose to relocate in the Western Treasure Valley on the recommendation of friends and family, others simply because they had nowhere else to go. Elmo Smith, then mayor of Ontario and subsequently governor of Oregon, was instrumental in making the Japanese American newcomers welcome and actively sought housing and jobs for those in need. As a result, the area's Japanese American population grew to more than 5,000 and has become an intrinsic part of the community.

From the beginning Japanese culture has been shared with the community. Early on the Nisei organized the Ore-Ida Judo Club which is now one of the most popular organizations for children and adults in the Western Treasure Valley. The annual Obon festival brings the entire community together in a celebration of Japanese culture. But, more importantly, the people live and work together for the betterment of the community. It is here where Japanese Americans want to show how their culture has enriched the community and to show how people working together can bring about positive results for everyone.

These stories will become the hub for educational experiences made available through the Western Treasure Valley Cultural Center museum. The interpretive museum will tell story of the Issei pioneers and their contribution to the agriculture of the region as well as tell the internment story and the heroics of Nisei vets during World War II.

A multi-purpose facility located on the campus of Treasure Valley Community College in Ontario Oregon, WTVCC will combine comfort, beauty and versatility. The civic center and "Community Gathering Place" will provide meeting and banquet rooms for small groups as well as large gatherings. The performing arts auditorium will feature a multi-faceted stage with state of the art electronics and acoustical design. Built by the community—for the community—WTVCC will serve the cultural, social and educational needs of the eastern Oregon and southwestern Idaho area.

Photos wanted for Treasure Valley exhibit

The Western Treasure Valley Cultural Center is seeking historical photographs that depict the Japanese American experience in the Pacific Northwest. Of particular interest are photographs of Japanese American farms and families from 1935 to 1960 and photographs of the relocation and internment experience. WTVCC is dedicated to telling the story of Japanese American life in the Pacific Northwest through provocative museum exhibits and educational programs. Let us add copies of your photographs to the study collection that will be available to scholars and historians interested in the Japanese American experience. Send your photographs to WTVCC, PO Box 980, Ontario, OR 97914. Your original photograph and a copy print will be returned to you and a copy negative safely stored in our museum archives.

Florin's forgotten pioneers

Sixteen Issei pioneers and their children, buried in the early 1900s at the Elder Creek Cemetery in Florin, had been forgotten until a new community-funded memorial was dedicated to them on Memorial Day. Standing (from left) are the Rev. Mark Nakagawa and Sam Kashiwagi, both of Sacramento Japanese United Methodist Church; Andy Noguchi, Florin Chapter, JACL, project sponsor; Shiro Tahara, Florin Buddhist Church; Shig Okimura, memorial project chair; and the Rev. Newton Ishiura, Florin Buddhist Church. This part of the Japanese section of the cemetery had been neglected for decades.

ARLINGTON, Va.—The gravesite of Col. Saige Okazaki, a WWII, Korean and Vietnam campaign veteran, was the locale of the annual Washington, D.C. JACL Memorial Day observances at the Arlington National Cemetery last May 24. Maj. Gen. James Mukoyama of Chicago was guest speaker. Col. Phil Ishio, MIS (ret.) laid the wreath at the gravesite while Mukoyama laid the JACL wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns in ceremonies following the lunch at the Fort Myers Officers Club.

Key Kobayashi, chapter president, noted attendees visited the gravesites of 37 Nisei and Sansei soldiers interred at Arlington as well as Col. Virgil Miller of the 442nd, Joseph Harrington, author of Yankee Samurai and OSS member Kay K. Sugahara at the columbarium.

WATSONVILLE, Calif.—Fifty years ago on Friday, June 12, 1942, the 119 seniors of Watsonville High School were graduated in their blue and white cap and gowns (class colors) with the graduates in a "V for Victory" formation. Conspicuously absent from the ceremony were 47 Japanese American students, most of them removed to the Salinas Assembly Center as ordered by Executive Order 9066.

A week later (June 18, 1942), a small graduation ceremony was held for 30 Nisei students. Principal T. S. MacQuiddy and Louise Worthington, dean of girls, managed to gain entrance to the assembly center at the Salinas Fairgrounds to present the diplomas and honors won by the students but they were not garbed with cap and gowns. Interestingly, as part of the program, the "Star Spangled Banner" and "God Bless America" were sung.

Seven Nisei never received public recognition. Four never received their diplomas as the mail never caught up with them.

This year, Watsonville High is celebrating its centennial. Along with the commemoration, the Centennial Class of 1992, the high school faculty and administration, with cooperation from the Pajaro

BILL HOSOKAWA

Found: a 49-star flag for 'the Fourth'

On the morning of July 4th I ventured into the basement in search of a corrugated cardboard box about two inches tall, four inches wide and four feet long. Eventually I found it, right where I had stored it.

The box contains a cotton American flag and an aluminum staff which comes in two pieces that fit together like a fishing rod. I bought the flag many years ago to display on national holidays. I still like to do that.

I've forgotten how long ago the flag came to our house, but there are several clues. One is the receipt, still taped to the box. It says in fading ink that the flag had cost me $2.50. Today the flag would cost maybe five times that much.

The receipt also indicates I had paid 7 cents sales tax. Near as I can figure, 7 cents tax on a purchase of $2.50 would be about 3%. The sales tax hereabouts today is around 7%. So I was correct in recalling that the flag had been bought some time back.

The flag in the box was somewhat wrinkled but the white was white and the red and blue portions bright and radiant. It is still a good flag. On a whim I spread it out on my lap and counted the stars. There were only 49, no matter which way I counted.

The 13 stripes, red and white alternately, symbolize the original 13 states. And the stars represent the states now united into a nation. For a long time there had been only 48 of them. Then Alaska became a state in January of 1959 and the 49th star was added on July 4 of that year. Hawaii attained statehood in August of 1959 and got its star on July 4, 1960. So it seems my flag was purchased either in 1959 or early 1960. A third of a century ago.

Well, who counts the stars on a flag flapping in the breeze? No one. Does it matter that I should be flying an outdated flag?

No, so far as I can tell. Yet it seems sad, and perhaps insulting to my Hawaiian friends, that the lovely state of Hawaii is not represented in the United States flag that flutters in the Colorado breeze outside my home. But there is something even more troubling.

Some years ago many homes in our area, maybe half of them, flew the Stars and Stripes on national holidays. Displaying the flag was a gesture of pride, a symbol of patriotism.

This year on the Fourth of July only about a quarter or maybe one of five showed the flag. What does this mean? I am not sure. Perhaps we are more sophisticated or more cynical about a government that has trouble making things work, or disillusioned about the state of the nation, disinclined to respect traditional values. Perhaps the Supreme Court set the tone for the country when it ruled that burning the flag is an acceptable way to exercise freedom of speech. Assault the symbol of the nation as a way of preserving its principles?

No wonder we're confused. But there is no confusion about the beauty of flags flying on a holiday, even though they may be a star or two short of history. I must remember to get an updated one. ☐

Time for sincere apology by JACL, he says

Regarding the Japan Times Weekly International Edition (June 8-14) article headlined "Japanese-American backs reparations, Time for 'Tokyo to face up to its past and deal with it,' Cressey Nakagawa, national president of the Japanese American Citizens League, addressed members of the Diet and [reportedly] said that Japan should face up to its past (Nanking massacre, Korean "comfort women," etc.) and deal with it.

Here are some quotes made by the Nakagawa:

"Other nations have, in effect, met their responsibility by 'facing up to their past and dealing with it.' ... But here you have a major economic power that still persists in denying these things occurred ... With Japan as rich as it is, why don't the Japanese do the right thing?"

Cressey Nakagawa is a hypocrite! He has no business asking anyone to apologize when he and the JACL can't even apologize for their shameful treatment of the courageous Heart Mountain draft resisters, the No-No Boys, and anyone else who dared to speak or act against the some of the ridiculous policies of the JACL. To me, Cressey Nakagawa and the JACL's inability to apologize is just plain sad. A simple, sincere apology would go a long way to get more Japanese Americans behind the JACL.

WWII Nisei veterans monument appeal

This appeal to the mayor and city council of Los Angeles is shared to open the way as planned the erection of the Nisei WWII veterans monument to preserve in this historical structure a most instructive chapter in the annals of American history.

The Nisei WWII veterans were aware of the fact that soon after Dec. 7, 1941, they were classified in the draft system as enemy aliens (4-C). However, they volunteered, went to war and fought valiantly in "Go for Broke" fashion. Thousands of them were maimed or killed. Under the most adverse circumstances, they established a brilliant war record that no other group in WWII could match.

The mentality of those Japanese Americans fiercely opposing the erection of the 100th/442nd/MIS monument echoes the deep-rooted conviction of three main groups: (1) Those who threw rocks at the Nisei veterans volunteering from behind the barbed wire of concentration camps, (2) those who wished to refrain from fighting against the country of their parents, but would have enlisted for service in the Korean War, or (3) those who resisted the draft because their basic constitutional rights were totally violated. The opposition by these groups should not be supported by the Mayor or the City Council.

Editor's note: For the past 18 years, Mr. Oda and his wife Dr. Mary have been continuing their Eugene Oda Memorial Scholarships, now consisting of four $1,000 awards through the San Fernando Valley JACL and one $500 award through River-side JACL.

BILL MARUTANI

'Gravitas'

BOOK REVIEW appearing in an April issue of the Washington Post arrived in the mail. The title of the book was "The Chairman" and it was about Mr. John J. McCloy, among other things a Wall Street lawyer, former U. S. High Commissioner in Germany who had entered government in 1940 as special assistant to Secretary of War Henry Stimson. Having met and spoken to the gentleman a decade or so in Washington, D.C., I read the book review with some personal interest; Mr. McCloy had passed away about three years ago. The book title's use of the term "chairman" is undoubtedly apt in this instance: Mr. McCloy was chairman, among other things, of the Chase Bank, Ford Foundation, and Council on Foreign Relations.

THE KEY INGREDIENT to all this success? "Gravitas," a Roman word meaning "a core, a weight of judgment and honest appraisal." According to Mr. McCloy (as the reviewer quotes from the book): "[T]he one who possessed it had the respect and regard of his countrymen, whether he was in the [Roman] forum or on the farm..." One assumes that the speaker was not excluding himself from that special category of gifted, godlike giants. Whether he did or not, that Mr. McCloy achieved and accomplished a great deal during his lifetime cannot be gainsaid.

Some of them, in my opinion, not so commendable.

AN ACHIEVEMENT unworthy of a public servant, particularly a lawyer who has been trained to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the land, was Mr. McCloy's key involvement leading to the rounding up and incarceration of some 115,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry and their Issei parents, solely based upon the repugnant criterion of race. In the Battle of Midway 50 years ago—June 4-5, 1942—our Navy decisively crushed the backbone of the Japanese Imperial Navy, including any capability it might have had to invade our Pacific Coast. Yet, the AJAs (Americans of Japanese ancestry) and their parents were moved ahead and kept confined behind barbed-wire fences.

MR. McCLOY APPEARED before the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians (CWRIC) at the Washington, D.C. hearings in 1981. When he heard the word "incarcerated" as applied to the AJAs and their Issei parents, his gravitas impelled him to angrily object to the use of the term. (In the biography which is the subject of the book review, he is reported to have written in 1942: "I wonder if anyone realizes the skill, speed and humanity with which the evacuation of the Japanese has been handled by the Army on the West Coast?") After all, one of the elements of gravitas is "honest appraisal."

THE COMPASS BEARING by which Mr. McCloy viewed Americans of Japanese ancestry and by which he was moved, is exposed in a revealing comment he is reportedly to have made after the CWRIC hearings. After reportedly characterizing the hearings as a "disgrace" he is quoted as condemning the redress effort as follows: "Money, money, money. Why don't they dun the Japanese government? We

Guest editorial

The role of the JACL president

Earlier this year, JACL President Cressey Nakagawa was invited to Japan to speak before the U.S.-Japan Parliamentarians League, many members of which belong to the Japanese Diet. In addition to his speech, Nakagawa was also interviewed by the Japan Times, the text of which appears below. Some members of the Japan Chapter, JACL, expressed serious concerns and doubts about Nakagawa's role in speaking before that group and the comments he made in the article. Was he speaking as president of JACL? If so, were his comments discussed and approved at the national level? Why didn't he communicate and meet with the local Japan Chapter to discuss the speech and article? And why did he make comments on such sensitive issues as "comfort women."

Since this situation has become a topic of controversy, Pacific Citizen has provided editorial space for Nakagawa to answer these and other questions in detail. We will offer similar opportunity to interested readers to respond to these comments.

Japanese-American backs Asia reparations

By Joy M. Tadaki
Japan Times staff writer

Japan should not "bury its head like an ostrich" but instead clean up its past and recognize the need for reparations, particularly to other Asian nations, said a visiting leader of a Japanese American organization.

Cressey Nakagawa, national president of the Japanese American Citizens League, visited Tokyo last week to address the U.S.-Japan Parliamentarians League, consisting of about 400 Diet members.

In an interview, Nakagawa said Japan must disclose its records on and address such issues as the Nanjing Massacre; the "comfort women" case, in which women were forced to serve in brothels in Japanese-occupied parts of Asia; and the emotional debate surrounding the Pearl Harbor attack.

Other nations have, in effect, met their responsibility by recognizing their past and dealing with it, Nakagawa said, citing World War II redress by the United States, Canada, and even the former Soviet Union and West Germany.

"But here you have a major economic power in the world that still persists to deny that these things occurred," he said, "and only until (Japan is) forced to do it, does (it) finally concede."

Do the right thing

The argument is being made that "with Japan as rich as it is, why don't (the Japanese) do the right thing?" Nakagawa said.

But he recognized that even if Japan officially apologizes, as Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa did to South Korea in January, lack of coverage in the U.S. would fail to "clear the air."

"Part of the problem in the American mind," Nakagawa said, "is that there is the impression embedded there that Japanese are racist, Japanese are different and ought to be treated differently and therefore are always viewed as being 'foreign.'"

Nakagawa said he fears such a U.S. perception may manifest itself in a form of Japan-bashing, justifying statements such as "Japan is a racist country, so why should we (Americans) be worried about exhibiting a little bit of racism?"

But he also attributed the current bilateral friction to disparities in the economic situation, saying such perceptions will linger despite impressions of a recovering U.S. economy and a declining Japanese one.

Race-related crimes against the Japanese American community have been rising, Nakagawa said, although Asian American hesitation to report problems has led to an inaccurate reflection of their extent.

He attributed the root of such crimes to a combination of envy, Japan-bashing, stereotyping, and residual hatred that has lingered from World War II and the Korean and Vietnam wars.

Although such hate crimes appear to have subsided, "if you think that Japan-bashing has gone away and won't (return) again, the answer is no," it will," Nakagawa said.

The U.S. will continue to see more "less than complimentary" books and articles depicting Japan's economic might, which serve to "concretize" misperceptions, he added.

The average American does not understand the details of economic friction and technical trade disputes plaguing the bilateral relationship, Nakagawa said.

"What relates and has an impact on him is whether or not there are jobs lost, whether or not there is a recession created and whether or not cutbacks are expected," he said.

Sensitivity fostered

Although the league does not have a long-term plan of action, it focuses on promoting sensitivity and dispelling misperceptions in the political arena.

Nakagawa said he particularly hopes to counter radio hate talk, a "breeding ground" for misinformation, through forums like TV talk shows.

"We will continue to be actively involved where we think race has become an issue in relation to Japan-bashing," Nakagawa said, adding that the league will promote prejudice-reduction programs and "go after anything that smacks of racism."

His presentation to Diet members last week focused on minority problems in the U.S., particularly as spotlighted by with the recent Los Angeles riots after the then-guilty verdict on police officers involved in the Rodney King beating.

The situation should be seen as an indicator of inner-city poverty, frustration, resentment and envy and should be placed in a larger context to avoid being dismissed as merely a race riot, he said.

Response to Alleged Controversy

By CRESSEY NAKAGAWA
JACL national president

I welcome this opportunity to respond to the concerns expressed by some members of the Japan Chapter which became the foundation for an article in the Pacific Citizen of June 19, 1992 entitled: "Controversy hits JACL President's Japan trip." The so-called "controversy" arises out of an interview which I gave to the Japan Times while I was in Tokyo on a speaking engagement. That interview with the alleged controversial remarks by me appeared in the May 27, 1992 edition of the Japan Times.

What was so controversial? According to some Japan Chapter members, the headline of the Japan Times article: "Japanese American backs Asia reparations" was controversial. In addition, the fact that the interview disclosed my personal views was somehow controversial because I stated that I "recognize the need for (Asia) reparations, particularly to other Asian nations. . ." and that "Japan must disclose its records on and address such issues as the Nanking Massacre; the 'comfort women' case, in which women were forced to serve in military brothels in Japanese occupied parts of Asia; . . ."

The additional charges are that these alleged controversial remarks "are likely to engender needless antagonism," said one Japan Chapter member; and that such controversial statements show a "cavalier" manner towards U.S.-Japan relations, according to another member. Why? Apparently, because the Japan Times article failed to specifically state that these views expressed by me in the interview were personal and "unofficial" as distinguished from being "official" position statements by the National JACL.

In other words, so long as my remarks were clearly indicated to be personal and not "official" JACL statements, the controversial nature of my statements disappears. My personal views therefore cannot "engender needless antagonism" nor represent a "cavalier" manner towards U.S.-Japan relations.

As I clearly stated in the Pacific Citizen article of June 19th, my comments in Japan were my personal views. However, because the Japan Times article did not make this point clear, I take this opportunity to share with our JACL members the facts as to my speaking engagement in Japan before members of the Diet, the interview with the Japan Times, the existing organizational policies which clearly support my personal views expressed in Japan and the merits of my views on Asian reparations as I expressed them in Japan.

U.S.-Japan Parliamentarians League

Earlier this year I received an invitation from Senator Ichiji Ishii, a member of the House of Councillors, to speak to his Diet colleagues about minority problems in the United States. I had met the Senator on past occasions in the United States and in Japan. Because of our previous discussions about civil rights and minority concerns in America, he invited me to speak privately to his Diet colleagues on my next trip to Japan. Shortly before my scheduled departure for Japan on May 15th, the Los Angeles riots occurred. Senator Ishii requested that I modify my remarks to describe the racial problems in the United States and to express my views on the implications of the Los Angeles riots.

My host assured me that a frank assessment and discussion about the subject matter was desirable, especially any implications that could affect the U.S.-Japan relationship. Thus, in speaking to the U.S.-Japan Parliamentarians League, I reviewed the Los Angeles riots from the African American, Hispanic and Asian American perspectives, especially the Korean American concerns. I praised Japanese companies in the Los Angeles area for providing financial aid even though such companies had a right to grumble or refuse to give such aid after the decision by the Los Angeles County Transportation Commission to rescind a contract with a Japanese company to build a rail car system. I further praised Japanese politicians for not issuing statements about America's problems being caused by ethnic diversity.

With respect to the implications of the Los Angeles riots on U.S.-Japan relations, I made three observations.

The first implication was that if America begins to accelerate its efforts to truly address the problems of the inner city and the economic underclass issues, Americans will turn ever more inward with a mood to turn isolationist in an effort to rebuild our economic and social infrastructure. Such an American mood favoring isolationism will increase the pressure on Japan to solve the U.S.-Japan trade imbalance problem as well as for Japan to assume greater financial responsibility for its maintenance of military security in the Pacific arena. This can only exacerbate tensions between the U.S. and Japan; tensions that we have experienced over the past 10 years.

The second implication was that if the Los Angeles riots evidence the anger of Americans who are poor, there are other Americans who are equally frustrated and angry about the lack of political leadership in America to deal with America's economic and social problems. Thus, the stage has been set for the emergence of an independent presidential candidate, Ross Perot, who has promised to get tough with Japan. Trade protectionism looms ever larger as the political debates over U.S. policy towards Japan and trade issues get heated.

The third implication arises out of the fact that the immigrant Korean community in Los Angeles discovered that they must find and exercise their "political voice" in America so that their concerns and problems will be addressed. I pointed out that as more Asian immigrants come to the United States, they bring with them the historic concerns of their people and the memories of the interaction of their country of origin with Japan. Naturally, those Koreans, Chinese and other Asians who are disturbed about Japan's military past, its colonialism and its military history and actions in Asia will voice their concerns about Japan in America in a very visible way. This is happening today in America if you follow Asian American news. If the disturbing revelations about Asian women being enslaved as "comfort women" by the Japanese military during World War II is not quickly resolved in the context of Asian reparations or otherwise, a prolonged debate in the United States over these human rights concerns raised by the Asian American community and the failure or unwillingness of Japan to deal with them can negatively impact the image of Japan and the perception about the Japanese people by average Americans. I therefore urged that Japan resolve these issues quickly.

Interview with Japan Times

In the interview with the Japan Times I outlined to the reporter the substance of my remarks on racial problems in the United States. The interview was not an excerpt of the text of my actual remarks. In responding to specific questions posed by the reporter on my personal views as to the issue of "comfort women," I explained the background on the issue as I have studied the matter. The issue of Asian reparations was only a part of a larger discussion about the Los Angeles riots, anti-Asian sentiment and other issues. As I shall explain hereinafter, my personal conclusion and views that Asian reparations are needed are not controversial as they have been made to appear.

Asian Reparations, Comfort Women

Reparations represents postwar payments to a victorious nation by a defeated nation for economic losses, damages to property and any other claims. In the case of Japan, a series of treaties after World War II settled all such wartime claims against Japan except for North Korea. Japan is now in the diplomatic processes of attempting to normalize its relations with North Korea. The reality is that Japan understands that some reparations for wartime claims will be needed to conclude an agreement with North Korea. The only question is how much and when, given the fact that the principal issue of concern in the pending negotiations involves the nuclear threat posed by North Korea.

Thus, my view that Asian reparations is needed is hardly controversial. Even though South Korea and China have recently attempted to reopen discussions on additional reparations for Japan's past colonialism, the position of Japan has been that the 1965 treaty with South Korea and the 1972 Peace and Friendship Agreement with the People's Republic of China concluded all such negotiations. My remarks supporting Asian reparations did not address these new reparations claims based upon colonialism.

My concern about Asian reparations or compensation was directed towards the "comfort women" issue as a human rights matter. In December, 1991, a Japanese historian and researcher, Yoshiaki Yoshimi, uncovered documents in the Self Defense Agency's library in Tokyo which revealed, for the first time, that the Japanese government was directly involved in the establishment of "comfort stations" for its military during World War II. This was an organized prostitution system for the Imperial Army of Japan. Earlier allegations of government involvement in the establishment of such "comfort stations" were heatedly denied. Euphemistically called "comfort women," the Japanese government had taken the position that such women were recruited by private entrepreneurs, not the government. Forced to face contrary evidence in January, 1992, the Japanese government extended an apology to the South Korean government and promised to conduct a thorough investigation into the facts.

Between January and May, 1992, old soldiers stepped forward to disclose that primary school girls of Korea, China and Taiwan were forcibly abducted and used as "comfort women." The estimated numbers of women thus abducted or "recruited" ranged from 100,000 to 200,000. In addition, lawsuits for compensation on behalf of 41 Korean women have been filed.

The Yomiuri Shimbun of May 16, 1992 finally editorially pressured the Japanese government to humanely respond to the "comfort women" issue. This leading newspaper with the largest circulation in Japan correctly pointed out that Japan must not rest upon a legal argument that the 1965 treaty with South Korea resolved all wartime claims, including the claims of "comfort women." The editorial urges the Japanese government to drop "legalisms" and consider other steps to resolve this issue. Here is a quote from that article:

"But the government and also all the people of Japan must realize that merely relying on legalisms to dispose of the reality of this heartbreaking history would cause truly big problems."

It seems natural to maintain the position that the issue has already been legally resolved. But based on the results of its investigations, Japan should consider what other steps can be taken to express our apologies and feelings of remorse to the victims."

Another editorial voice of concern and support for the resolution of the reparations or compensation issue for South Korean women victims appeared in the International Edition of the Japan Times (Jan. 27 - Feb. 2, 1992). In commending Prime Minister Miyazawa for his apology to the South Korean government for the "immoral and inhuman wartime conduct against Korean females," the editorial stated:

"Mr. Miyazawa did the right thing. But settlement of this issue will require much more than a mere expression of apology and remorse. Anything short of satisfactory compensation to the Korean women forced to suffer so will further open up rather than heal the historical wounds. Mr. Miyazawa promised Mr. Roh and the South Koreans that his government will do its best to look into this past Japanese misdeed and to take the necessary measures. Japan now must fulfill the prime minister's promise to the letter." (emphasis added)

Any controversy in Japan over the "comfort women" issue has been caused by the Japanese government.

In the first place, Japan has deliberately avoided educating young Japanese about their country's wartime history. As a result, the response by the Japanese media and the reaction by the average Japanese has been that of viewing the "comfort women" issue as one of scandalous government conduct; curiosity and dismay as to what information had not previously been disclosed rather than acts of public outrage and civil disobedience.

In the second place, the Japanese government has essentially stonewalled the demands of South Koreans for compensation for "comfort women." Until this past week, the Japanese government appeared to take the legal position that individual claims for compensation should be tried before the Japanese courts so that the court could rule on the legal question as to whether such "comfort women" claims are barred by the waiver of all other wartime claims set forth in the 1965 treaty with Korea.

I have read most, if not all, of the treaties executed by Japan to end World War II and those which normalized relations with other Asian countries. It is correct to state that a settlement on such wartime claims was either reached by way of payment of reparations or waived by certain countries. In the case of South Korea,

ROLE

Article II of the 1965 treaty provides that all claims to property rights and interests are "settled completely and finally." Based upon this language, Japan has contended that such language clearly covers any claims raised by "comfort women."

These are serious legal questions about the soundness of Japan's position. If the negotiators of the treaty did not know about the "comfort women" claims because individual claimants did not appear in 1965, how can it be claimed that a knowing waiver of such claims was intended by the parties? Can a treaty between sovereign nations eliminate the claims of individuals against Japan? Can the individual claims of women be eliminated by a waiver of all other claims on the ground that women are property rights? Japan's only hope is that its position will be upheld by its court system.

If Japan wins before its courts, the result would become an effective legal roadblock to any other such claims filed by other "comfort women" from other countries in Asia.

Such a legal victory of Japan would be Pyrrhic at best. If there was injustice in the case of Rodney King, such injustice would pale in comparison to an adverse ruling by Japanese courts in the case of "comfort women." The enormous cost to Japan would be a serious "loss of face" in the international community where Japan is struggling to demonstrate that its political standing should be viewed as equal to its economic stature.

A change in Japan's position may be near. On July 6, 1992, Koichi Kato, Chief Cabinet Secretary, held a press conference at the Foreign Press Center in Tokyo. On behalf of the Japanese government, Mr. Kato announced that a six-month investigation of 127 documents kept by six ministries and agencies, including the Foreign Ministry, the National Police Agency and the Education Ministry resulted in the conclusion that the Japanese government was indeed involved in the matter of "comfort women" from the Korean peninsula as well as other nations of Asia. Mr. Kato further stated that the Japanese government would consider financial compensation paid to South Korea and other countries.

As an aside, I have been accused of creating controversy by my remarks in Japan related to this "comfort women" issue. If this change in Japan's attitude towards compensation for "comfort women" is the result of pressure caused by "controversy," I am pleased to endure such unwarranted and baseless criticism.

Implications for JACL

For an organization like JACL which deals with human rights issues, the "comfort women" issue falls within our sphere of interest for two reasons.

First, the Los Angeles riots demonstrated how internationalized racial strife has become. As the Los Angeles Times editorialized on May 10, 1992, the intervention by government factions of South Korea on behalf of South Korean immigrants living in Los Angeles seeking reparations from the United States and the City of Los Angeles for property losses truly shows how the American dilemma of race relations has suddenly been internationalized. Is there any reason to believe that the "comfort women" issue, as a human rights concern, will be confined to Japan? Is it possible that the "comfort women" issue will become a part of the American political dialogue on Japan policy urged by the Korean community or other Asian communities?

I believe this will happen as immigrant Asian American communities vocalize their political concerns over issues that confront their country of origin as well as domestic issues. Two recent examples illustrate this point. The first is an article in Asian Week of December 13, 1991, entitled: "From Pearl Harbor to Nanking Reflections" written by Lester H. Lee. Mr. Lee is a Chinese American immigrant. He is also the president of Recortec, Inc., and a member on the White House for Commission for Executive Exchange. His article reminds us that last year's 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor also marked the 54th anniversary of the Nanking Massacre. The article is a vivid example of how other Asian Americans feel about Japan.

The second example is also an article written by K. Connie Kang in the San Francisco Examiner of January 23, 1992, entitled: "Japan must erect monuments to 'comfort girls'." Ms. Kang writes a stirring story of how Korean women of her mother's generation grew up in fear of being snatched by Japanese policemen to be thus "recruited" into the "comfort girls brigade."

For JACL then, these international civil rights and human rights issues cannot be lightly tossed aside if we are to effectively build coalitions with other Asian American communities and organizations. What we specifically do about such issues must be decided on a case-by-case basis.

The second and more practical reason for concern about the "comfort women" issue arose as I considered what impact this issue may have on our efforts to complete the redress program. Obviously, we need the passage of HR 4551 and companion legislation this year to ensure that an additional 12,500 eligible recipients receive their redress payment as well as provide funding for Civil Liberties Education Fund. If this additional legislation is not enacted this year because of budgetary problems or other reasons, we will have to pursue such legislation in future years with even greater political hurdles to overcome.

The face of Congress promises to change in a dramatic way in this election year as doves of incumbents have decided to retire or have been defeated in the primaries. We face the difficult future task of educating new members in both the House and the Senate about the internment experience and redress program as well as compete for appropriations at a time when needs and demands for government funds are enormous, given our deficit and economic recession.

Anticipating a worst case scenario, the protectionist mood of America will increase as the rebuilding of America becomes our primary national focus. Tensions about the trade imbalance with Japan will not disappear easily, if at all. Michael Crichton's bestseller, Rising Sun, when produced into a movie, has his lead character describing the Japanese as the most racist people in the world. As nationalism grows in the United States and in Japan, the Japanese American community may again be tarred by American attitudes towards Japan and perceptions about the Japanese people.

For the next five years, the events of World War II will be commemorated as each 50th anniversary appears. The war with Japan will provide many such events, including the dropping of the atomic bomb. Books on the mistreatment of American and other soldiers by the Japanese Army in the Pacific have already appeared in print and more will come. Scrutiny of Japanese military history 50 years ago may intensify the efforts of certain American veterans groups to seek their claims for reparations from Japan based upon the atrocities committed by the Imperial Army of Japan.

All of this suggests that we, as an organization, must be prepared to deal with an aggravated negative image of Japan and of the Japanese people as we pursue the completion of redress. Because the Japanese American community has so often been identified with Japanese nationals, we do not need the burden of responding to arguments about the unwillingness of Japan to fairly deal with and resolve the "comfort women" issue as we work to finish redress in the midst of this worst case scenario. We do not want to be confronted by newly elected women to the Congress and Senate who may develop political resistance to the completion of the redress program because the Japanese government mistreated women. We do not want Asian American and other minority elected officials to confuse our redress with Asian concerns about Japan. We do not want to be confronted with the unfair argument that American redress should be held hostage to Japan's responses to reparations claims by American veterans or anyone else; an argument that we have successfully defeated to date.

Backlash, antagonism and other consequences

From the foregoing, it should be apparent that no new controversy between Japan and the United States or Japan and other Asian nations has been created by my interview or otherwise. Nevertheless, it is claimed that my statements "are likely to engender needless antagonism," or that a backlash will result against Japanese Americans. To all of these statements, I would like to know where "antagonism" against Japanese Americans of the JACL has or might arise by the expression of my views as an individual. I want to know what "backlash" has or will result against Japanese Americans or the JACL.

More specifically, I would like to know if any Japanese government official spoke to members of the Japan Chapter, and advised them that JACL's views (on the assumption that my interview was as National President) are offensive or otherwise viewed as creating needless antagonism. My same question arises as to whether any Japanese business executive so spoke to members of the Japan Chapter that inspired this letter campaign to the Pacific Citizen rather than to me. I would also like to know what "backlash" has been experienced by any Japanese American working in Japan. Has there been any "backlash" caused by Japanese nationals against Japanese Americans or our community organizations in the United States?

The answers to such questions are important to JACL for two reasons. If the feared "antagonism" and/or "backlash" is not factually supportable, then those who make such charges are seeking to suppress the voice of JACL or anyone closely connected to it out of some unjustifiable fear of Japan or Japanese interests. On the other hand, if there are distinct incidents of Japanese government or Japanese business antagonisms or backlash against the Japanese American community or the JACL, we need to know about it in order to respond to any threat to suppress the opinions and views of JACL as well as any individual Japanese American.

JACL policies respecting international civil rights issues

Notwithstanding the fact that my aforementioned Diet speech and interview were given in my capacity as a private individual, the question of whether JACL has a policy on "international civil rights" has been raised. In other words, if I had given the speech and interview of the National President of JACL, does the organization have a policy guiding the expression of our organizational concerns on such issues? The answer is Yes.

In July, 1982, the national JACL had its first meeting with the Japanese Cultural Affairs and Public Opinion Overseas Study Team. The purpose of that meeting between a study team from Japan comprised of government and industrial leaders and the leadership of JACL was to establish the grounds upon which we could organizationally participate in the promotion of better relations between Japanese Americans and the Japanese nationals population in the States as well as to improve the understanding of other Americans about Japanese Americans, the Japanese people and the nation of Japan. A JACL paper was produced to indicate the JACL perspective on U.S.-Japan Affairs.

As a follow-up to that meeting, Resolution 34 was presented and adopted in 1982 by the National Council at our 27th Biennial National Convention (Gardena Convention) held at the Hyatt Airport Hotel in Los Angeles, Calif. Resolution 34 charged the International Relations Committee to "... explore specific actions for attainment of improved American-Japanese relations," provided that we do so "... with adequate care that JACL does not either in image or in fact become a 'front' or propagandist for Japan." (emphasis added)

lution 1. Resolution 1 attempted to and does define our organizational involvement in U.S.-Japan Relations in a way so that our focus is upon civil and human rights concerns of Japanese Americans and all other people. This Resolution 1 reads as follows:

"Now, therefore, be it resolved that the JACL shall consider direct involvement in U.S./Japan relations strictly and only within the explicit context of an organization whose mission is to advocate and protect the human and civil rights of Americans of Japanese ancestry and of all people." (emphasis added).

Consistent with these policy statements of involvement in international civil rights, we have organizationally expressed our concerns on the specific problems of the Korean population in Japan from time to time.

In 1984, at our 28th Biennial National Convention in Honolulu, Hawaii, the National Council adopted Resolution 2. Resolution 2 was an expression of organizational concern for the plight of Korean residents in Japan who "... face severe social discrimination and live under insecure legal status." Our organizational concerns set forth in Resolution 2 were directed to the U.S. government.

Resolution 2 in 1984 was followed by Resolution 17 in 1988. At our aforementioned Seattle Convention the National Council adopted Resolution 17 which called for the creation of a fact-finding committee to investigate the allegations of unfairness and discrimination by Japan against its Korean, Chinese and other minority populations by use of fingerprinting and other requirements of the Alien Registration Law in Japan.

From the foregoing, it should be clear to anyone who educates himself or herself about JACL policies that we are concerned about and are organizationally involved in international civil and human rights issues. It is also clear that JACL has naturally had a focus on such human and civil rights as it affects the Asian American community.

The implementation of such policies and views is organizationally left to the national president and the national board. As a spokesman for the National JACL, I am well aware of and sensitive to the need for board discussion and consideration where there may be policy questions. In this particular case, while the express subject of Asian reparations or the "comfort women" issue has never been actually passed upon by the National Council or the National Board, it is consistent with the past policy statements adopted by the National Council. In any event, since my interview was not given in an official capacity, there is no clash with any existing policy set by the National Council or National Board.

Conclusion

True controversy can be a very healthy experience for an organization where meaningful differences of opinion on important issues can be weighed and thoughtfully considered. In this case, there does not appear to be any controversy over the substantive merits of the views that I expressed to the Diet members or even in the interview. If there is a difference of opinion or a disagreement on facts relating to the "comfort women" issue or Asian reparations, let the discussion begin.

It appears that the sole basis for the concerns expressed about my views is whether such views are acceptable to the Japanese. In other words, some of our members in Japan fear that the Japanese resent being made aware of or reminded of embarrassing facts and issues.

We must always keep uppermost in mind that the JACL is an American organization that must deal with American human relations problems that are impacted by the actions or inactions of Japan.

To the extent that someone seeks to muzzle and control the voices of the leadership of this organization with no clear reason for such control other than simple fear of the antagonism by unknown Japanese persons, this organization cannot do its work. To base our involvement in U.S.-Japan issues upon the subjective interpretation of how an American view could be heard as criticism or controversial by the Japanese means that the leadership of this organization cannot speak out on human rights issues before checking off with a designated expert or experts on U.S.-Japan relations; even though such alleged expertise on U.S.-Japan relations may be unrelated to human rights concerns and issues. The organizational decision and choice is to be silent because of fear or to speak out in a thoughtful way on all civil rights and human rights issues of concern to JACL. I hope that after our work on redress we have learned that JACL must never be afraid of exercising its organizational voice.

Valley Historical Association and the Watsonville JACL, invited the Nisei of those remaining to participate in their blue and white cap and gowns.

This year, 13 returned and were hailed at the June 12 graduation ceremonies (exactly 50 years later) on the high school football field. They were: Grace Sugidono (now Mrs. Yoshi Fujita), Evelyn Matsui (Mrs. Carmel Kamigawachi); Shizuko Sugiyama (Mrs. Roger Shiozaki, Monterey); Kikuye Yamamoto (Mrs. Tom Mine); Florence Yoshizumi (Mrs. Keichi Matsushita, Santa Clara); Hatsuko Eto (Mrs. Mike Imoto, Lindsay); Kazue Kamitani (Mrs. Tommy Yamamoto); Dr. Shigeru Kizuka, Kazu Oshima, San Mateo; Bill Hirano, Jiro Sugidono, Frank Matsumoto, Sunnyvale; Bob Yamamoto.

The diplomas were awarded by Board of Education member Willie Yahiro, first Nikkei elected to office here. Oshima, responding for the 1942 Nisei graduates present, thanked the Class of 1992 for inviting them and everyone involved for "this gracious gesture."

Kawase, chapter president. "Establishing the Human Relations Commission and developing a curriculum guide for teachers in Sonoma County are legacies we can claim to have contributed to our community for years to come. In addition, the activities have put us in close touch with other community groups and agencies and tightened our working relationship with the media."

The curriculum guide was co-sponsored by the chapter and the Sonoma County Office of Education. Titled "The Japanese American Wartime Experience—1941-1945," the 65-page guide was designed to be used by teachers of grades 4-12 to fill the gap left in social studies texts on the subject.

Board member Dr. Bob Fuchigami, who, along with Nakano, had been part of the four-person team that developed the guide, headed a workshop for teachers in February to suggest ways of using it. The successful session led to a request for the workshop to be repeated in the fall.

didn't attack Pearl Harbor. They did." (emphasis added). Of course, such a civic azimuth is 180 degrees in the opposite direction—unless, of course, one makes no distinction between an American of Japanese ancestry and the then-enemy Japanese.

DURING THOSE HEARINGS, at a recess period, I chatted with Mr. McCloy, in an effort to have him understand. I mentioned to him that when the Pacific War broke out in December 1941, our Issei parents advised us that this was our country and we should defend it; that indeed, an older brother of mine was already serving in the Army Air Corps (as it was then called). To this last, Mr. McCloy's response was "On which side?"

REDRESS

agrees with the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) that the additional funds constitutes an "entitlement." Unfortunately, the response is not as encouraging as it may appear at first glance.

OMB is saying that the full entitlement status authorized by Congress in 1989 was capped at the original $1.25 billion. OMB is taking the position that in order to provide new funding, equivalent cuts in other domestic programs or tax increases must be made. The purpose of designating payments under the original Act as an entitlement in 1989 was to ensure that all eligible individuals would receive their redress payments without having to find an offset in other programs for the payments.

According to CBO, the Budget Enforcement Act does not require Congress to make compensating cuts in other domestic programs to provide funding to complete the original redress program. Therefore, OMB's position presents an unnecessary impediment to successful passage of the legislation. Because of the two week recess in July and the one week recess in August, there is very little time left in this session of Congress in which to pass the necessary legislation.

There is approximately $250 million remaining in the original fund, enough to pay 12,500 individuals this October. Roughly speaking, that means only individuals born sometime before the end of 1934 would receive their checks in October. The Office of Redress Administration is still processing claims and is not yet able to provide an exact cutoff date. Failure to pass the legislation would mean that at least 11,000 individuals already found eligible to receive redress payments will not be paid. It is currently estimated that the number of individuals who may qualify but not receive redress because of the lack of funding could be as much as 14,500. The Department of Justice has not released a final estimate of the number of verified claims.

Passage of the legislation is further complicated by the Department of Justice proposal to eliminate the education component of the original Act. President Bush, has recently submitted nominations to the Board that is to oversee the education fund. His actions throw into question what the Administration's actual position is on the education fund.

Senators Stevens (R-AK) and Rudman (R-NH) have recently signed on as co-sponsors of the Senate bill. JACL urges redress supporters to continue to call or write their members of Congress and the President to urge passage of the redress legislation. Sample letters, including followup letters to the White House, are available from the Washington, D.C. office, (202) 223-1240, the other JACL regional offices and redress district coordinators. The regional offices also have the addresses and phone numbers of the grassroots network volunteers, if you want to contact the coordinator closest to you.

KRISTI

she has not really experienced any prejudice. "Here in California, especially, there are many Asian skaters. When I first started, Tiffany Chin was one of the big Olympic hopefuls. I really looked up to her and it was great seeing other Asian Americans."

Despite the constant demands on her time, Yamaguchi is as steady and composed in public as she is on the ice. "Sometimes it is hard because you are in the public eye a lot... but you want to give a little bit of your time to everyone because they are supporting you and they took the time out to express that to you," she said. "I've had really nice fans and have been lucky that they are supportive."

Yamaguchi said she has not yet made any decision about her future plans, the question that is most often asked of her. "The Olympics is always such a big goal, the big goal. . . All of a sudden that's gone and now I have to find another goal for myself and work toward that." This fall she will appear in national print ads for one of her newest endorsers, Hoechst Celanese Corp., as spokeswoman for a brand of acetate fibers used in apparel.

Her decision about whether to turn professional or not may be made easier given the recent ruling by the International Skating Union (ISU), which allows all professional skaters to compete in Olympic games, with some restrictions.

"It (ISU's decision) has opened up many more options for me," said Yamaguchi. "I don't have that pressure to make a definite decision and not be able to go back (to competing)." Crediting skater Brian Boitano, 1988 gold medalist, with getting the ISU to change the Olympics eligibility requirements, Yamaguchi said that details still need to be ironed out.

Being thought of as a role model in her own right is still new to her. Her message to young people is this: "If you have a dream, just really dedicate yourself to it and set some goals for yourself. There'll be ups and downs but keep your mind to it and work as hard as you can, because in the end all the work is worth it." It certainly has been for Kristi Yamaguchi.
